Grover Cleveland, President.

In the history of American politics the career of Grover Cleveland, as compared with that of others who have risen to the same official eminence, stands, says the Washington Post, in many respects, unexampled.

He entered the public service at Washington without any special training in the schools from which statesmen are commonly supposed to graduate, yet in the conduct of national affairs exhibited from the outset statesmanlike attributes of a high order.

It was never claimed for him that he possessed in conspicuous measure the qualities of popular leadership, yet, as no man before had done, he developed with his other growth the faculty of swaying a great party at his will.

He was never an orator of captivating eloquence, yet is gifted with a cogency of speech that on more than one occasion has compelled a hearing from deaf and unwilling ears.

There is little magnetism in his temperament as the term is ordinarily understood, yet time and again the Democratic party has yielded to the resistless spell of his personality.

He remained at the rear in comparative seclusion during the greater part of the late administration, yet there was always a potent suggestion of his presence at the front.

He was never a politician, as politicians are usually defined; he held the political machine in contempt; he discarded old political methods; he made himself obnoxious to a large and powerful wing of his own party; yet when came the final test of strength, and without effort on his part that savored of partisan aggressiveness, he thrice captured a nomination and twice an election to the highest office in the gift of any people.

Mr. Cleveland has won his way to distinction through apparently contradictory departures from previous records, but the mystery of his success is not so phenomenal as to baffle explanation. It was because of his peculiar characteristics, because of his distinctively independent attitude, because what might have seemed hypocrisy in others of narrower range of thought was universally accredited to him as a brave conviction and an honest pur-

He entered the White House as the first Democratic President in a quarte: of a century.

He administered the duties of his office with conscientious and painstaking fidelity, with a clear-sighted regard to the interests of the whole people, and in the mean time had become recognized as the embodiment and expounder of the principles of tariff reform, an issue that, notwithstanding the reverse of the next campaign, was destined to play an important part in his subsequent successes.

His renomination at St. Louis in 1888 without opposition was no less a tribute to the general merit of his administration than it was an expression of his supposed invincibility before the people. He was unquestionably the strongest candidate that could have been named at that time. Under any other leader the Democratic party would have gone to the wall in the same way upon the abstract question of tariff reform.

It was not until a Republican Congress in the flush of victory made practical demonstration of its faith in pro tection by the passage of the McKinley bill that the popular reaction against tariff taxation set in with fully developed and formidable strength, and enabled the Democratic party to pave the way for its restoration to power in the small-pox. 1892.

Long before the Chicago convention met it was seen that if Mr. Cleveland were not the "logical candidate," he was the inevitable and unconquerable favorite against all possible combinations. His nomination could not have been avoided. Mr. Cleveland held the same high place in the confidence of the people that he so deservedly won during his first administration; that he retained without perceptible abatement for the ensuing four years, and ceeded in reviving her, after which she that found voice again at Chicago in was escorted to her home. an almost imperative and universal demand for his re-nomination.

It was not that Mr. Cleveland was in trust in his personal integrity, in his sturdiness of will, in the perfect patriotism of his motives, in the resoluteness of his devotion to the public welfare.

The Post says it will cheerfully support him in measures or policies that it believes to be in the public interest. It reserves the right in the future as it has exercised the right in the past, to criticise or antagonize that which it fails to approve, still trusting and believing that the wisdom of the people in again honoring Mr. Cleveland with the Chief Magistrary may be fully vindicated by results.

Musical Notes. It seems as if the attendance at a first class concert was in inverse ratio to the excellence of the performance, and why it is so is a question that many an artist has asked in vain. Some one has said that the education of a child should begin one hundred years before it is born, meaning that it takes several generations of education and training to produce a well defined and lasting result. Germany and Italy are known the world over as musical nations, because their people have been trained in music for centuries. In our own country the only musical training that we had to begin with a few generations ago was the psalm singing of our Puritan fore-fathers, and even that mild form of education was not lasting enough to make a very solid foundation. We are now on the road to improvement, however, so that with the advanced culture of one hundred years hence the artist of that day may reasonably look for an audience as large and appreciative as his soul could desire.

The Screen Law in Stamford.

The majority of the saloons in this town, says the Advocate, not only in West Stamford, Dublin, Wescotts and South Stamford, but in the centre of the borough, have, for several months past, done business on Sunday, with very little attempt at secrecy. If the local authorities insisted upon the enforcement of the screen law, which provides that an unobstructed view of the bar shall be had from the outside, there would be very little Sunday liquor selling. In this town, however, no regard is paid to the provisions of the screen law, and the interior of nearly all the saloons are hidden from the view of Sunday liquor-selling became more general than ever during the last win-ter. Some of the dealers in the bor-ough say they do not like to sell on Sundays, but were forced to do it be-cause others engaged in the business were "taking away their trade." It was of course their natural consequences of failure on the part of the authorities to enforce the Sunday-closing law. Special borough policemen have been among the regular Sunday customers of saloons in the centre of the borough.

PARIS MAKING

in the Government. THE DEFENSE OF M. BOURGEOIS

The Chamber Votes Confidence

Another Exciting Day in the Panama Trials.

IN THE ASSIZES.

PARIS, March 14.—Paris made history yesterday. Once more the Chamber of Deputies declared its confidence in and decided to support the Government by a vote of 297 to 228. This was only after an exciting debate in which Premier Ribot and M. Bourgeois, late Minister o Justice, elequently defended the course the Government had taken in reference to the prosecution of the Panama Canal defendants.

Evidence in the trial of the conspirators was given by two witnesses that M. Gobron, ex-Deputy, received his check of 20,000 francs from Baron Reinach in payment for some shares in a tannery company and that had nothing to do the Panama affair. The Court of Assize heard the witnesses for M. Blondin. week, and are the longest cases that have been tried before that tribunal in These, who were for the most part friends of the accused, unanimously bore testimony to Blondin's integrity and dis-interestedness, also asserting that it was quite impossible that he could possibly have lent himself to any questionable transaction. The next witness called attracted the general attention of all in the court. This was Goliard, the mysterious personage who was asserted to have been the means of getting up the interview between Mme. Cottu and Soinoury. The witness proceeded thus:

"I have known M. Berton, Secretary to M. Cottu, for fully two years. Berton informed Mme. Cottu of the agreement made with the King of Portugal to send 30,000 workmen from Mozambique to the Isthmus of Dazien, and thinking something might be done to help the holders. I went straight to the Ministry of the Interior, where I knew a person whom I thought might be useful. I was shown Nicolle, whom I had never met before and did not know, and explained the matter to him. I asked him if there were no way of arranging the matter, as, for instance, by setting Cottu at liberty, so that he might look after the interests of the canal, to which Nicelle replied that he must refer the matter to his superior, A. Soinoury. I reported this conversation to Nicolle, who said that he would arrange an interview between Mme. Cottu and Soinoury, but that be would not go to Cottu's house to ie ch her. Then I thought of M. Billier and took madame to his house, where I introduced her to Nicolle, and my own m ssion terminated therewith."

The president next called M. Bourgeois and a general movement of confus-ion manifested itself in the court as the la e M.nister's name was pronounced. A.l eyes were directed towards him, and all ears listened attentively as he came forward to the witness box, where, in a clear, calm and collect voice, firm but not loud, he gave his evidence.

"My name has been mentioned several times by Mme. Cottu, and the last hear-ing of this case ended by leaving on the minds of the public the impression that a Minister of Justice of the French Repub-lic had been ready to lend himself to the commission of an infamous action. I therefore thought it my duty to come forward, untrammeled by the chains of office, to give not an explanation, but a simple denial. One day the President of the Council told me that a request had been made that Mme. Cottu should have freer access to her husband, to which I replied that it was a simple matter of kindness and that I would permit it. Except for this subordinate detail I never heard of Mme. Cottu's interview with the director of the Service of Public Safety."

Mme. Cottu was recalled and affirmed that Goliard had spoken to the Minister of Justice. Goliard started up and said: "I admit that I made a stupid mistake. I was wrong to introduce the name of Minister of Justice and had no authority for doing it."

After this, M. Bourgeois rose to his feet and cried, excitedly: "Is there any one present who can stand up and reiterate the accusations made against me?" The president replied in the negative, M. Bourgeois then left the witness box and the court adjourned for a few

When the case was resumed Goliard. Nicolle and Soinoury were recalled, and all three formally declared that M. Bourgeois had had nothing whatever to do with the affair of Mme. Cottu. Goliard subsequently made a statement which came upon the court with a shock of surprise. He said:

"Some few days ago Mme. Cottu, by the advice of M. Barboux, sent for me to arrange the details of a surprise which was to be sprung on the court with reference to an interview with M. Soinoury. Mme. Cottu asked me a series of questions designed to render the information she had given M. Barboux more explicit. Consequently I was not surprised to read an account of the interview in the papers."

At the request of M. Barboux, Mme. Cottu was recalled and on re-entering the witness box avowed that Goliard had accurately related what had passed be tween them.

She declared that Goliard had told her he would go and see M. Bourgeois in regard to her. M. Goliard confirmed Mme. Cottu's statement, but, he added, "Nobody authorized me to say so."

M. Bourgeois arose and exclaimed: "If anyone knows that I acted contrary to the dictates of honor let him speak."

geois nor any other Minister was in any way responsible for his interview with Mme. Cottu. He himself had originated the idea of a conference with her and had arranged the meeting without communicating with his superiors. He believed that he was only doing his duty in trying to get at the center of the scandal. The charges that he had threatened Mme. Cottu, or had promised her any favors in return for information which she might give him, were utterly false.

Still Missing.

No trace as to the whereabouts of the missing Mrs. William Howard has yet been found. As usual in such cases, sensational stories are rife, and no end of persons say that they have met the missing woman. Each of these sup-posed clues have been followed up, but in every instance were found to be wrong.

Searching parties were out all night, and the harbor near the bridge has been dragged. This afternoon the harbor below Butler street will be thoroughly dragged.

A majority cling to the belief that the woman committed suicide by jumping into the river that runs close by where she was last seen. There are those however, who are as as tenacious in their belief that she has wandered off and is in hiding in some barn, or off and is in hiding in some barn, of other sheltered place.

Her husband is naturally almost crazed with grief, and acts upon almost every suggestion offered to locate her whereabouts. He still inclines to the belief that she committed suicide by throwing herself in the river.

To a GAZETTE reporter he this morning said, it was hard for him to retain the idea of suicide as her very nature had an abhorence of such deeds in others and that for the past few days she had seemed to be in a more rational and happy frame of mind than for a long time previous. He thinks that she stood on the banks of the river and watching the turbulent stream became suddenly insane and jumped into the water and was carried out into the water and was carried out into the creek. He, however, still has hopes that she may be found alive.

She had on when last seen a black cashmere dress; black cloth top gaiters; and on her black cloth top gaiters; and on her head a small brown shawl. She wore on her left hand a plain gold wedding ring with a light guard ring and a gar-net ring with two small diamonds.

Cured by Hood's Sarsaparilla

Catarrh, Kidney Complaint, Heart Failure, Liver Troubles. "I think it my duty to voluntarily tell what

Hood's Sarsaparilla has done for myself and wife. Last spring my wife was in a very bad way with kidney complaint; felt Miserable All the Time and could hardly get around the house. She began to take Hood's Sarsaparilla, and in one week she was improving. When she had taken but three bottles of Hood's Sarsaparilla she was cured of that dreadful disease. As for me, I was troubled with Catarrh, Heart Failure and Liver Complaint. Suffered so intensely that I had very severe pains in the small of my back and noises in my head like a flock of black birds all singing at once. So you see I was hard up. I also experienced benefit from Hood's Sarsaparilla within a week after I began taking it. I have improved rapidly and can now sleep better than I have for a year, can eat and not bloat as I used to. water behind it rushed down the creek, river. The ropes which moored the boats dock and the mainland were snapped like thread, and even heavy anchor chains were broken. In the course down the creek many boats were badly stove, and the Pittson, valued at $10,000, and the Adriatic, at $8,000, are thought to be so badly damaged that they will sink.

The news of the great flood spread over the town, and in a very short time the docks were crowded with people. The screams of the men on the helpless boats and the crunching of the big steamers

LIKE A BIG FLYING FISH.

Prof. Langley's Machine for Aerial Navigation.

HE HAS READY A SUCCESSFUL WORKING MODEL.

Open Air Trials Are Soon to be

WASHINGTON, March 14.—Prof. Samuel Pierpont Langley, successor of Prof. Henry O. Baird in the control of the Smithsonian Institution of this city, it is claimed, has developed a flying machine which he believes is practicable. The machine is a working model. In configuration the body portion closely simulates a mackerel. The backbone is a light but rigid tube of what is technically know as "title metal," one of the many alloys of aluminum and steel.

It is 15 feet in length and two inches in diameter. To give rigidity to the skeleton, longitudinal ribs of stiff steel are provided, intersected at intervals by cross ribs of pure aluminium, the result being a lattice framework of great strength. The engines, which are located in the portion of the framework corresponding to the head of the fish, are of the double oscillating type. They weigh 60 ounces and develop one-horse power, the ligthest of that power ever made.

There are four boilers of thinly-hammered copper, weighing a little more than seven pounds each, and they occupy the middle portion of the fish. Instead of water, a volatile hydrocarbon is employed, the exact nature of which is a matter of secrecy, but which vaporizes at a comparatively low temperature. The fuel used is refined gasoline, and the extreme end of the tail of the fish is utilized for a storage tank with a capacity of one quart.

Before passing on to the boilers the gasoline is volatilized by going through a heated coil. There are twin screw propellers, which would be made adjustable to different angles in practice, to provide for the steering, but which in simply a working model are necessarily fixed at a certain point for a given trial. Screws of various pitches and ranging from 20 to 80 centimeters in diameter have been experimented with, but is not yet definitely determined which shall be adopted for

The rear one is somewhat smaller. Both eroplanes are designed to be adjustable with reference to the angle they present to the air. A tubular mast ex-tends upwardly and downwardly through about the middle of the craft, and from its extremities run stays of aluminium wire to the top of the eroplanes and the ends of the tubular backbone, and by this trussing arrangement the whole structure is rendered exceedingly stiff.

The machine was constructed and perfected to its present degree in a secret room in the Smithsonian Institution, where it now rests. It was conceived about 20 months ago by Prof. Langley, who associated with him in the work of experimentation, Chief Clerk W. C. Winlock and Dr. Cidder, a scientific expert employed at that time in the Institution. Open air tests will soon be made.

The United States Supreme Court has affirmed the judgment of the Court of Claims in favor of the letter-carriers in the case of Aaron S. Post and Frank Gates against the United States. These cases arose under the act prescribing eight hours as a day's work for the letter-car-

In the Gates case the question was whether or not the eight-hour provision as applied to letter-carriers meant an average of eight hours a day for a week, the Department holding that any deficit in eight hours on Sundays or other days could be set off against an excess over eight hours on other days. The Court ules that this cannot be done and that the carriers are entitled to extra pay for

In the Post case the position taken by the United States was that the eight hours should consist of time employed in the actual distribution and collection of mail, and that the carriers could not re-cover extra pay for other service within the post office performed by them in connection with duties imposed on them by the postmaster. The Court holds that this position is untenable, and that the carriers are entitled to extra pay for over eight hours' work under such circum-

Statement Which Receivers Will Make to the Court Today. -

PHILADELPHIA, March 14.—The statement of the Reading receivers was completed yesterday and will be filed in court today. It is merely a preliminary report and shows only the current liabilities and assets of the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad Company and the Philadelphia and Reading Coal and Iron Company as they stood on February 20, 1893.

The report fixes the floating debt proper at nearly $10,000,000, in addition to which were liabilities for wages, interest, rentals, supplies, &c., making an aggregate of $18,472,828.09.

To offset this are assets, including $5,-000,000 for coal on hand and an equal amount for coal sold, but unpaid for, aggregating $15,779,784.49. Of cash on hard there was but $29,240.88. The net current deficiency, which com-pelled the company to go into bankruptcy, amounted to $2,693,043.60.

The Boston and Maine and New England Railroad scheme is referred to in a brief paragraph, containing only the information that bonds of the company to the amount of $2,327,000 have been locked up in that enterprise and that "there is reasonable ground to believe that these collaterals will ultimately revert to the company."
