CURED

About seven or eight months ago I was attacked by a cough, and at once began to take a medicine much advertised as an expectorant, and continued using it until I had taken about six bottles. Instead of giving me relief, it only made me worse.

Consumption

had laid hold of me, and my hopes of recovery were all gone. I was a mere skeleton, but a friend of mine, who had been some time away, called to see me. He recommended me to try Ayer's Cherry Pectoral, and kindly sending me a bottle, I took it, but with little hopes of recovery. I am thankful, however, to say that it cured me, and I am to-day enjoying the best of health.

ADVICE TO BANKERS.

Comptroller Eckels' Words of Wisdom to Money Kings.

THEIR DUTY TO THE GOVERNMENT.

The Bankers of This Country Can ill Afford to Assume an Attitude of Indifference Toward the Financial Representatives of the Government That Has Been So Generous with Them.

WASHINGTON, May 11.—The directors of the Washington Loan and Trust company gave a dinner last night in honor of the new comptroller of the currency, during the course of the evening, Comptroller Eckels expressed his thanks for the compliment bestowed upon him and said in part:

"If I am to judge from this evidence of friendship I may well believe that here at least those most to be affected by the acts of the comptroller have no fear of sudden destruction coming upon them, nor are they disturbed over the idea of the doing of some indiscreet and ill considered act on his part that will lead to unutterable confusion and possible disaster.

"The banking system which you represent is too great, and the interests which it involves too far reaching in their importance to be lightly dealt with or hastily acted upon. It may be changed in the future, under pressure of new necessities, but such change will only be wrought after a consideration commensurate with the magnitude of the subject and for the betterment of the system. It will not come as a result of political changes, nor for the furtherance of political desires.

"Its strength and its existence must always rest in the confidence which the people have in it, as best securing to them the fulfilling of their wants and the absolute safety of their obligations.

"But while the banking interests take to themselves much of the credit for the results accomplished by the national banking system, it yet must be conceded that its great success has arisen through the knowledge on the part of the people that the national bank was distinctly a child of the government, and as such, through its fostering care, afforded a safety that before, under another system in times less prosperous and states less rich, was wanting.

"Because of this I believe that upon every national bank is placed the moral obligation to hold itself in readiness at all times and under all circumstances to assist the officers of the government in every time of distress in maintaining the nation's credit. I am aware that no legal reason exists for such a course, but having drawn so much of wealth and power to the government with them, the bankers of this country can ill afford to place themselves in the attitude of looking with indifference upon the anxiety of the financial representative of the treasury when the financial integrity of the government is threatened. A proffer of help from them at such a time, spontaneous in its character and patriotic in its motive, would disarm a thousand critics who are loud in their denunciation of it and reconcile them to a system which they charge with being the recipient of special privileges denied to them."

Local fishermen are enjoying something new in the way of fishing. During the wet season just passed, the city reservoir's overflow carried with it large numbers of fine German Carp into the swamp below the reservoir. The fishermen, armed with a revolver, now enter the swamp, shoot the fish and pick them up just like picking up sticks. Several people from this city secured large numbers Wednesday.

Mr. Smith Ayers of Bridgeport, dropped dead on Water street, this city, Wednesday afternoon at 4:30 o'clock. Mr. Ayers was an old ship builder, well known in this city and was engaged in building himself a skiff at his son's, John Ayers, shipyard on Water street. He worked until 3 o'clock Wednesday afternoon, and was on his way to the home of his niece, in East Norwalk, where he stops when in this city. When in front of Raymond Brothers' coal office, he was seen to fall on the sidewalk. A gentleman went to his assistance, but he was dead before the man reached him. The body was removed to the rear of Raymond Bros. office and Medical Examiner Burke summoned. He said death was due to paralysis of the heart. Deceased was 80 years of age. He leaves five children. Such a Thing as Too Much Dignity. It is all very well for a traveling man to be on his dignity, but if he overdoes it he is apt to encounter the fall before which, we are told, pride goeth. When I first went on the road, I had a mortal objection to the word "drummer" and resented the term whenever applied to me. On my second journey I called upon an old fashioned merchant in a Texas town whose name was on our books and to whom my predecessor had always sold large bills. I introduced myself with a good deal of dignity and handed him my card. "Oh, you're —'s new drummer," remarked the old gentleman in a somewhat patronizing tone. I was nettled considerably, and correcting him said: "No, I am their traveling man. I am not a 'drummer.'" The merchant was quite as good at repartee as I was, and looking at me half in pity and half in contempt he said with a sneer, which he made no attempt to disguise: "Oh, that's so, is it? Well, I was looking out for —'s drummer, but if you ain't he I've nothing for you."

No amount of persuasion or apologizing had any effect on the old gentleman, to whom the representative of a rival house sold a first class bill the same afternoon. The lesson was not thrown away on me, and now a man can call me a Hottentot, provided he accompanies the salutation with a good order.—Cor. St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

Three Great Navigators. To review the work of Columbus without referring to that of Vesputius and Magellan would leave the story of new sea and world discovery disconnected and incomplete. This will be potent when it is remembered that, though a believer in the rotundity of the earth, it was not Columbus but Magellan who first physically demonstrated that fact by circumnavigation. And Magellan might have failed but for the previous work of Vesputius. The latter had explored the Atlantic coast of South America farther south than any of his predecessors, and the south Atlantic ocean eastward to the islands of South Georgia, nearly to the parallel of Cape Horn.

By this journey Vesputius demonstrated with a considerable degree of certainty that the strait, which had for some years been looked for, leading to the elusive unknown sea that bounded the eastern coast of Asia, was not to be found through the new lands of the west north of 54 degrees south, at all events. The mouth of the Amazon, the bays of Rio Janeiro and of the La Plata had been explored and were found to contain fresh water, so that through none of these could an entrance to the unknown sea on the farther west be found.—Thomas Magee in Californian.

Hawk Noses a Very Old Feature. It is a mistake to suppose that the hawk nose is confined to Hebrew owners, though the persistence of the qualities which it indicates makes it most frequent in the race which it principally adorns. A pictorial addition to the history of these noses was recently discovered in a graphic caricature drawn by the clerk of the court on the edge of a fifteenth century record of a plaintiff whose nationality the least expert "nasologists" would have at once detected, without the legend, "Aaron filius diaboli," which the artist had been at pains to inscribe beneath it. But the "hawk nose" is at least equally the possession of the Syrian and the Syrian Arab, as it was of the Phœnician of old—all shrewd, money getting races.

Vespasian possessed it in perfection, and though it is news to us that when young he "retrieved his ruined fortune by horse dealing, a science always notorious for its unscrupulous dealing and sharp, dishonest practice," he was descended from a thoroughly business parent and bequeathed his carefulness in money matters to his son Titus.—London Spectator.

The "Basin" of an Apple. One end of the apple bears the name of "basin" and contains the remnants of the blossom—sometimes called the eye of the fruit. This part of the apple is deep in some varieties and shallow and open in others. This is the weakest point in the whole apple as concerns the question of the keeping quality of the fruit. If the basin is shallow and the canal to the core firmly closed, there is much less likelihood of the fruit decaying than when it is deep, and the evident opening connects the center of the fruit with the surface.—Professor B. D. Halsted in Popular Science Monthly.
