A REUNITED COUPLE.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry Mitchell Reconciled by a Sympathizing Parson.

The Husband Admitted Error.

An affecting scene was witnessed in Supt. Birmingham's office at Police Headquarters in Bridgeport last night, when an estranged husband and wife were reunited through the efforts of a minister of the gospel who was present and saw that the wife was a deserving woman and the husband a man not bad at heart. The husband, who met his wife with annoyance on his face, left the station with her after promising to do right in the future, the wife showing perfect happiness on every feature.

The couple were Henry Mitchell and his wife, formerly of this city, who had been separated for some months, Mitchell left his wife and went to work on a farm at Redding Ridge, but went to Bridgeport a few days ago to spend his money in drink. Mrs. Mitchell, who is an unusually attractive woman and to all appearances a loving wife, learned that he was in Bridgeport, and on the advice of friends went there to look for him. Yesterday she caused a warrant for his arrest on the charge of nonsupport to be issued, and last night he was arrested. Mrs. Mitchell was at Headquarters when her erring husband was taken in, and greeted him in terms of reproach so gentle that it was apparent to all observers that her heart was not in the making of trouble for

Rev. John W. Gill, rector of St. Luke's Episcopal church, who frequently visits headquarters, witnessed the meeting, and saw that a reconcilation of the couple was not impossible. After he had listened to their talk for a few minutes he knew that Mitchell's mother was at the bottom of the trouble, and assumed the duty of clearing away the clouds that marred the serenity of the life of the couple who had vowed to be one until death should part.

With a tact that proved him to be the possessor of a thorough knowledge of human nature Mr. Gill began to talk to the wife and then to the husband. The result of the talk was that the wife withdrew the complaint and the husband solemnly promised to live in happiness with his wife in the future and signed a written pledge of total abstidence from intoxicating liquors which was witnessed by Supt. Birmingham families. and Prosecuting Attorney Giddings. The wife then kissed her husband and carressed him so affectionately that it was plain that she had not been the erring one. They then went away together.

When Mitchell left his wife he took with him their two children, who are now at Redding Ridge. He agreed to bring them back to Norwalk to-day. The couple have had five children, three of whom are dead. Mrs. Mitchell and her husband spent the night with relatives and came back to their former home this morning. Mitchell was once well-to-do and had a good home at Wilton, but lost it through bad habits. Then his mother interfered in his domestic affairs, and the separation followed.

ELUDED THE CHIEF.

W. H. Kelly Strikes Mrs. Weyerhauser and Then Skips Out-Arrested Later,

About three weeks ago a molder who gave his name as W. H. Kelly came to this city from Massachusetts and succeeded in securing employment at the foundry on Hoyt street. He boarded at Mrs. Weyerhauser's, on River street.

Yesterday afternoon he became engaged in an argument with Joseph Moore, as to the source of their creation. The argument took place at Mrs. Weyerhauser's. Kelly was getting rather the worse of the argument when he suddenly let go his right fist and delt Moore a trip-hammer blow on the face, knocking him down.

Mrs. Weyerhauser then interfered and Kelly struck her, loosening two or three of her teeth. In the meantime Chief Bradley was summoned, but before the big chief put in an appearance Kelly was scooting out of reach around Cross street.

In company with Moore who had by this time rallied from the blow the Chief started after Kelly but failed in detecting him. He then rode to South Norwalk and made a circuit of the saloons but could not locate his man.

During the Chief's absence in South Norwalk Kelly returned to the foundry and asked for his money, and proceeded to pick up his tools. Word was sent to the police and Special Officer Valiant who was in citizen's dress, weut to the foundry and placed Kelly under arrest. bnt the prisoner refused to go with him unless shown a warrant for his ar-

Then there was a tussle. By this time the Chief had returned and learning of the situation went to Valiant's assistance and the fellow was hustled down to the station-house.

This morning he was taken before Judge Hubbell, who sent him to jail for thirty days on the charge of assault and fined him $10 and costs, $17.70, for abusive language. The charge of resistance to officers was not pressed. Officer Valiant accompanied the prisoner to the Bridgeport jail this morning.

Memorial Service.

Last evening a very touching service was held at the home of Herman Fancher, Unionville. Rev. F. E. Robbins preached a memorial sermon in remembrance of thirteen members of that community who have died within the last two years, eight of whom have been removed within eleven months. Excepting two little ones, all of these were adults, many of them heads of

A WOMAN CONFESSES.

The Poughkeepsie Murder Mystery Is Promptly Chared Up.

POUGHKEEPSIE, N. Y., Oct. 31.—The mystery about the murder of Martin De-laney, the young man who was killed last night while peering over a stone wall at a young man and his sweetheart on the Hyde Park road, was solved today. solution has caused as great a surprise as the news of the murder.

The local police today arrested Thomas Manchester, a clerk, and Miss Edna Min er for the murder.

It is not known who supplied the clew, but immediately after having arrested the girl, who is young and quite good looking, she confessed that she was with Manchester last night and that he fired the Manchester declines to talk about the crime. He is a married man, and there is great indignation over the affair. Miss Miner was until a short time ago a waitress at Mrs. Bentell's restaurant at Bridge and Main streets. Her family is quite well known here, and her brother, who is highly respected, is a clerk on the steamboat Mary Powell.

The prisoners were arraigned in the re corder's court and were remanded to await the action of the grand jury.

The murder was committed at 10 o'clock. Delaney, with three friends, was returning from a walk. Opposite Dr. Mc-Cormick's residence in Washington street a man and woman were together in the shadow of a cedar tree. The boys stopped a few feet away, which angered the man.

The boys leaped over the wall to avoid a row. As they did this a shot rang out. Frightened, they were combing back again to run away. Martin Delaney, the first to mount the wall, received a second shot, which killed him.

The man cried, "How do you like that?"

The boys replied, "You have killed Martin!"

The couple then ran down Washington street, which is a suburb, and escaped in the darkness.

the Ecclesiastical academy and was consecrated a priest by Pope Pius IX. He became successively secret chamber-lain, almoner and bishop, and in 1866 he was created a cardinal. After the entry of the Italian troops into Rome in 1870 he went to Germany and staid there for several years. In 1872 it was proposed to appoint him embassador of the German empire at the Vatican, but Pius IX refused his assent to the project, and Prince von Hohenlohe resumed his functions of cardinal at Rome

In 1879 he was promoted to be cardinal bishop of Albeno, but as the result of dis-sensions in the papal court, Prince Hohenlohe resigned his title of cardinal bishop and again returned to Germany, where he settled upon his estates. In 1884, however, he once more returned to Rome and resumed the rank of a cardinal priest.

STARVING IN NEW YORK Unable to Obtain Work, but Too Proud to

Beg and Too Honest to Steal. One of the city's great army of unemployed fell unconscious yesterday for lack of food at the corner of Doyers street and the Bowery. In the Hudson Street Hospital, where he was cared for, he went down on the record as "Frank Lyman, 29 years old; born in New York, 25 years; occupation, sign painter; disease, destitution, syncope."

Last Tuesday night Lyman had his last morsel of food. It was a banana. It took his last cent. He tramped the streets all that night, and there was no breakfast in sight. All day Wednesday he had no food.

The rest of his story told to the kind hearted doctors and nurses at Hudson Street Hospital follows:

"Thursday morning came, and again no breakfast. I say breakfast from force of habit, perhaps, but I ought to say nothing to eat was in

"It isn't a laughing matter to be starving in a big city, but it does seem comical, in a way, when you think of the millions all around you. I've heard, too, that the farmer out West is burning wheat-burning bread, really.

"I'd given a week's hard work for one good bite into a loaf of bread. "I went downtown. Yes, I went into restaurant after restaurant, but the people didn't believe me. Now, I look partly respectable. But everybody sems to have been overrun with requests for food.

"My pride rebelled at asking for food, but my stomach rebelled harder, and it was a case of swallowing my pride for the sake of getting something more substantial to swallow. "But the pangs of hunger were getting worse. I tell you I'll share my last piece of bread with a man who felt the pangs of hunger as I did. I wouldn't wish my worst enemy more

"I felt bitter towards the world. I thought it owed me at least half a loaf of bread or two, as I was willing to work for it. No, I don't think suicide ever came to my mind.

"I recollect now that people looked at me in a queer way as they hurried by. I suppose I was as pale as a

"As far as I recollect, I walked up Park Row to the Bowery. I didn't care what became of me now. I found myself walking harder and harder, and the pain greater and greater.

"The last place I recollect seeing was a restaurant just across the way from Doyers street.

"Then everything seemed to turn around. I felt that awful pang leaving me-oh, what a relief-and the last I recollect was an effort to stop from falling."

Lyman was quickly surrounded by hundreds of people. Even Chinamen looked. He had fallen to the sidewalk like a log. An ambulance was "Starvation," explained the surgeon.-New York World.

Just Like a Woman.

"Major, if you don't punish boy, I will." The words fell sternly from the lips of Mrs. Domo, who was ruefully surveying the wreck of her best reading lamp.

"Bob!" said the Major, severely, come here. Maria, leave the room!" Mrs. Domo went into the dining room, and shut the door to keep out the horrid sounds. "Whack! Whack Whack!" from the Major.

"Wow! Oh, wow! I won't do it again!" from the boy. "Whack' Whack! Whack! Now, will you break lamp shades, you young whelp of Satan?"

"No-o! No-o!" sobbed Bobby.
"Whack! Whack! Whack!"

Mrs. Domo's ire by this time was quite evaporated. Again that dreadful slipper fell, and again the air was rent with the yells of tortured innocence. "Oh, Major, stop!"

"Not by a jugful. We're having a splendid time in here. Whack! Whack! Whack!"

Mrs. Domo could stand it no longer. "Stop it, you big brute!" she exclaimed, rushing into the apartment.

Then she grew madder than ever. There, on his hands and knees, was the Major, galloping around on the carpet, while Bobby was larruping a slipper and giving vent to terrific cries of woe.-Chicago Dispatch.

The Sunday Dinner.

The Sunday dinner in many a household is made the feast of the week. This means anything but a day of rest in the kitchen. The meals on Sunday should be of the simplest, so that the housewife may have the most rest possible. In these days of difficulty in securing good help in the house, too much cannot be done to make Sunday a perfect day of rest for the women of the household, especially in hot weather. Rest is the best health retainer and strengthener also, as well as the cheapest.

It does not take long for a pair of boots that are worn constantly to get so shabby that frequent blacking seems powerless to restore their freshness. Then is the time to cut off all the old buttons, and pute on a set of bright, new ones. Shoe buttons are not an expensive luxury, and yet they are a pet economy with the majority of women.

HAS EYES LIKE AN OWL. A Man Who Can See Only When Darkness

This is a strange case of Henry C. Lanner, whose eyesight was ruined for daylight, but of perfect vision at

Ten years ago he was working in a foundry when a shower of molten iron struck his face and both his eyes. He was carried to a hospital, stone blind, and when the wounds had healed and the bandages could be removed both eyes were sightless. He tried to reconcile himself to this awful affliction through the first day after the wrappings had been taken from his eyes.

That night, however, happening to awake after the light had been put out in his room, he found to his amazement that he could see every object about him distinctly—chairs, books, the figures on the wall paper and carpet were seen as plainly as he had formerly beheld them in the daytime. He lay awake until morning, overjoyed as a man brought out of a living grave. But as the light of dawn flooded through his windows the world became dark to him, and he could see nothing when the morning light became strong.

The next night he found that he could read a newspaper in the darkness and write letters, while in the day he could only dimly recognize the outlines of people and buildings.

A REMARKABLE TOWN.

Norwich, in England, is Slowly Sinking into the Earth.

Assuredly the most curious town in England, and the most upside-down looking place, is Norwich. As the stranger walks up one of its streets he wonders whether he is the victim of a disordered imagination or whether an earthquake has been visiting the locality. Here two houses are leaning one against the other, as if for mutual support; three more are leaning from each other as if in sullen anger; higher up are dwellings sunken in the center or at the ends; the pavement on one side in certain places is higher than the other, while a little further on it is lower.

In short, everything has a general appearance of topsy-turveydom in this town of what are described as "drun-ken houses." The cause of it all is not far to seek. Norwich, as everyone knows, or ought to know, is the centre of the salt industry, and it is the drawing of brine and rock salt for the manufacture of this very necessary commodity that is the moving factor in the mischief. On nearly all sides of the town are big salt works, with their engines pumping hundreds of thousands of gallons of brine every week, while the extensive mines of rock salt are being cut in all directions.

Capt. Dreyfus Costs France $12,000 a Year and is Making His Keepers Crazy.

Captain Dreyfus was found guilty of divulging army secrets by the government of France two years ago. There are not many nations in Europe rich enough to treat themselves to a traitor like Captain Dreyfus, who is assuredly the dearest object in that line that ever existed.

The Figaro says that France might, perhaps, have four heroes for the same price. The government machine, with its usual genius, has so skilfully arranged matters that it costs $12,000 a year to maintain in a distant islet a man who has been degraded publicly for treason. If he lives only twenty years, which would not be extraordinary, he will have cost his countrymen, reckoning in the interest, a little more than $400,000. Never did any man who saved his country cost as much as that.

It is also the first time on record that any human being inspires a great enough interest for people to spend 14.000 francs a year merely to learn the condition of his health. If a Minister happens to dream some night that Dreyfus has escaped, that costs 1,500 francs in telegrams the next morning. If Dreyfus catches cold it takes 10,000 francs to announce the event to the proper authorities, while if a German or English vessel is sighted sailing past the Ile au Diable we have to pay 2,000 francs.

Besides this the keepers and watchmen on the island are subjected to the most cruel discipline. One has gone mad on account of the weight of responsibility, two men have been de voured by sharks in going from the island where the Governor lives to the Ile au Diable to find out how Captain Dreyfus had slept at night, and pale, nervous, restless beings are seen walking about anxiously with a frightened look, startled and driven out of their wits at the slightest sound, having hardly time to eat and sleep; they never take their eyes off a very tranquil person, who walks his hundred paces after breakfast, smoking his pipe with his hands behind his back. They are people with a clear conscience, who watch a man who has committed a crime.

"New Woman" will be a stronger wo-man than the old one. Certainly, fresh air and the right exercise will do much for her. Fresh air is a great restorative, exercise a great nerve tonic if a woman be in condition to take it A healthy woman can avoid disease. She can avoid the seemingly almost inevitable 'weakness' of her sex if she pursues the proper hygienic methods. The same methods will not cure her if she be already sick. Taken under medical direction, in connection with the right medicine, they will help effect a cure. No women who suffers at all from so-called "female weakness" should attempt athletics of any sort. She should first put herself into possession of strong and hearty health by taking Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. After she is thoroughly well, exercise and diversion will help to keep her well. The cure should come first. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is designed and recommended for only the one thing. It acts directly upon one set of organs. No matter what is the matter with them, it be already sick acts directly upon one set of organs. No matter what is the matter with them, it will cure it. It will not cure anything else. It is a wholesome tonic, an invigorating nervine, or nerve-food as well as a healing medicine, and thousands of perfectly well women have found that by taking it regularly during the period of tions for Its Suppression. The New York State Board of Health has issued a circular from which we extract:

The disease known as tuberculosis, and, when affecting the lungs, as pulmonary tuberculosis or consumption, is very common in human beings and in certain domestic animals, especially cattle. More than one-seventh of all deaths occurring in human beings throughout the civilized world is caused by tuberculosis, and it is estimated that more than one-fourth of all deaths occurring during adult life is due to it, and that nearly one-half of the entire population at some time in life acquire it. It attacks people in all conditions of life, of all ages and occupations, in the country as well as in the city. The disease is essentially the same in animals and in man, and has the same cause. Among herds of high bred cattle not infrequently more than fifty per cent are found to be suffering from this disease. Tuberculosis may affect any organ of the body, but most frequently first attacks the lungs. When the living germs find their way into the body, if favorable conditions for their growth exist, they multiply wherever they may lodge and produce small new growths, or nodules (tubercles), which tend to soften. In animals, in addition to the tubercles, large white hard masses or soft cheesy material containing gritty particles may be produced. The discharges from the softened tubercles or tubercular masses, containing the living germs in enormous numbers are thrown off from the body in various ways. When once the disease becomes established, it as a rule extends, and the tubercle bacilli multiply and produce a poison which is absorbed by the body. The poison causes fever attended with wasting and great feebleness, and ultimately the disease ends in death. On the other hand, recovery from the disease may occur, or it may exist for long periods of time, and in cattle often extends widely and produces grave changes in the body without rendering the victim apparently very sick or affecting its milk producing powers. Cattle may be seriously affected with tuberculosis and yet not cough, eat well, be fat and appear healthy, and the most careful physical examination by a skilled veterinarian may fail to reveal the presence and nature of the malady. The germs which are thrown off in the discharges from diseased portions of the body do not grow outside the living human or animal body, except under artificial conditions, although they may retain their vitality and virulence for long periods of time, even when thoroughly dried. As it has been definitely proven that tuberculosis can only result from the reception of these germs into the body and their multiplication there, it follows from what has just been said that when the disease is acquired it must be through the reception into the body of the living germs that have come more or less directly from some other human being or animal affected with the disease. In man, these germs are cast off in enormous numbers in the expectoration and in the evacuations from the bowels. In cattle, also, whether there be cough or not, the slobber or spittle or discharge from the nose and the discharges from the bowels contain these germs when the lungs or the intestines are diseased. These discharges fall upon the ground or mangers or floors or fences, and are often either licked up by other animals or taken with their food, or dry and become pulverized and are then breathed into the lungs in the form of dust. As the disease is communicable it will be readily seen that the presence of one tubercular animal in a herd may ultimately cause the disease in many others with which it comes in contact.

It has also been fully established that the milk of cows which are tuberculous, whether the udder is affected or not, may contain these living and virulent tubercle bacilli, and that the milk from such a tuberculous cow, no matter how healthy the animal may appear, may cause the disease in human beings who use it. It makes no difference how far such milk may be carried or how much it may be mixed with milk from healthy cows, it is always dangerous and its distribution for human consumption, if done knowingly, is criminal. Among stallfed dairy cows, from five to fifty per cent are sometimes found to be affected with the disease. Tuberculous animals are also frequently killed for food. Their flesh sometimes contains the germs, and if not thoroughly cooked is capable of transmitting the disease. Boiling the milk and thoroughly cooking the meat destroys the germs. In cattle, the only efficient means to prevent its extension to other members of a herd and to human beings is by the prompt destruction of all diseased animals.

If the payment by the State for the tuberculous cattle destroyed be assured, as it can be by an act of the Legislature appropriating a suitable be open for the gradual extinction of bovine tuberculosis. This matter is brought to the attention of farmers and dairymen and cattle owners in the hope that they will co-operate in the attempt to free this State from a dangerous and costly pest, and thus promote their own private welfare as well as the interests of the public health.

Only 3 Days More!

-And Honest Money, Protection, Peace and Prosperity, will again come to our suffering country, in the People s tri amphant election of McKinley and Hobart.

Pray for the Republic.

Bishop Williams, the Episcopal prelate of the Connecticut diocese, has just issued a prayer to be said in all the churches throughout his jurisdiction. The prayer has special reference to the political campaign and election. It is the same as the prayer issued by Bishop Potter of New York. The prayer will be said next Sunday in all the Episcopal churches in Conecticut. It is as fol-

"O, Almighty Lord, who fashioned the hearts of men and considerest all their works, grant, we beseech Thee, to us and to all the people of this land, the spirit of obedience to Thy commandments that walking humbly in Thy fear, we may under Thy mighty protection, continue to dwell in rightsousness and peace. Defend our liberties; preserve our unity; save us from lawlessness, dishonesty and violence; from discord and confusion; from pride and arrogance and from every evil way. Continue Thy goodness to us, that the heritage received from our fathers may be preserved in our time and transmitted, unimpaired, to the generations to come; that all nations of the earth may know that Thou, O Lord, art our Saviour and mighty Deliverer and our King forever. Grant this, we beseech Thee, through Jesus Christ, our Lord. Amen."

Our Lack of Faith.

"Faith," says St. Paul, "is the substance of things hoped for, the evidence of things not seen." In these latter days and among a large number of people, faith is a promise fulfilled, the substance of things already had. A still larger number of poeple have faith in the Chapel on Berkeley street, will be everything else but God. They are sung Magnificat and Nunc Dimittis by perfectly willing to rely upon anybody Gadsby; anthem, "What are these," by and everybody save Christ. They profess to believe in a God, and yet never go to Him save in the last extremity, when the end of their days draws near and the grave yawns before them. They have full faith in the world, the flesh and the devil, and live up to that faith very religiously.

They believe in the promises that the world holds out, of pleasure, happiness and profit, and follow where it leads, expecting most implicitly to see the fulfillment of these promises in a very short time and to a practically unlimitad extent. They listen to the promptings of the flesh and obey all its behest-or nearly all of them-relying upon its solemn professions of good will and undying friendship.

And yet man's faith in the world and his reliance on its promises are very often rudely broken. The world very rarely keeps its promises. It may pretend to and show a very glittering pretense, but in the hour of greatest trial, when more needed than ever before, the world is but a broken reed to lean upon; it will betray min even as it stoops to kiss him.

It is so, with the flesh and the devil. Both will promise and seem to be sager to perform, but their profession is merely a trap into which man is foolishly led to meet most direful punishment at their hands. And yet mun continues to have faith in every one but his Lord and Saviour, Jesus Ohrist. He trusts all else, and still he is betrayed by all else.

We trust the banker who takes our money; the lawyer who looks after our business; the merchant from whom we buy goods; the doctor who feels our pulse; the conductor of the train upon which we travel; the captain of the ship upon which we have embarled; even the servant who sweeps off our doorsteps; and with it all we refuse to trust the only Son of the one eternal God. We believe man, who cannot, by taking thought, add one cubit to his stature, and we refuse to believe the Creator of the universe upon which we walk, or the Christ who expiated the sins of the world upon the cross of Calvary.

Is it not incomprehensib's that there should be such foolishness in humanity? There is a terrible longing in every human heart for another existence, something better than that which prevails upon this earth. This life is unsatisfactory at the best and the divinity within us is ever pleading for a higher development, for a greater freedom, for a nobler impulse. We are not satisfied with this world, and yet, when the doors of a better and grander world are thrown wide open to us, we refuse to take advantage of the offer.

It is the lack of faith that keeps our souls in dark and noisome dungeons, shut out from God's blessed sunlight and deprived of the air that comes from paradise. If we fully believed we would follow in the way that Christ marked out for us. If we had faith in His promises, we would strive for the mansion that He has provided for us; but, as it is, we look with half-veiled disbelief in the compassionate eyes that are turned toward us and fatuously ignore the outstretched hand that would lead us into immortality.

Successful Social Function.

The members of the matinee Whist club and a number of their friends assembled in Lockweod's Hall last night and an enjoyable time resulted.

The hall was in fine order, the floor as smooth as new glass, and the entire surroundings in keeping with the happiness of all present.

Card tables were conviently arranged about the hall for those who preferred a game of whist to galop, schottische or waltz, and the scene was as resplendent as a brand new rainbow and as lively as one could wish for.

Altogether there were about forty present. The function was a success as are all such affairs given by this deservedly popular club. It is intended to hold similar meetings throughout the entire festal season.

The Hams Were Stuffed With Sawdust and the Sausages With Wind.

The San Francisco Examiner says that buying bolognas stuffed with wind instead of sausage meat is not a profitable investment, as John Daly of 434 Jessie street, that city, can testify. A few days ago Mr. Daly bought a half interest in a delicatessen store at 304 Fourth street from Mrs. Martha Evarett, paying $200 for his share of the stock and good will. He saw her advertisement in a daily paper, and thought the store would be desirable for a gentleman who wanted to embark in business.

Before purchasing John went down and looked at the place, which fairly reeked with good things. Along the walls hung rows of nice fat sausages and hams and smoked fish, while the shelves held dozens of cans of corned beef. There were kegs of ostensible tripe and pigs' feet, dried beef, cheese and tins of pickled goods. Mrs. Evarett showed her partner a large consignment of eggs in cases and barrels of butter, and pointed with pride to a robust porcelain pig rooting in a plate of uncooked beans in the window, after the manner of pigs in delicatessen stores. Thinking that the place contained at least $800 worth of stock, Mr. Daly bought it and took charge of the store. His partner wanted to go to the country for a few days, and was perfectly willing to

The first morning John opened up he alleges that he made a discovery He shifted the egg cases, and found that only the top layers bore fruit The rest of the pasteboard pigeon holes were hollow mockeries. Saw dust took the place of flesh and bone in the ham covers, and the rolls of Questions of the Day, Gold and Silver butter were empty cans rolled in damp cheese cloth. The 400 bottles wrapped in pink tissue paper and sup posed to contain wine and beer proved to be nothing but unfiltered Spring Valley water.

But the cruelest sham of all was the sausage. The sleek brown skins were filled with wind, and each one was ballasted with a bullet to prevent the sausage from floating up against the ceiling like a toy balloon. It was the same way with everything else. The cans were all empty, and the pickled tripe department was a delusion and a snare. Mr. Daly soon retired from business, and will sell the counter and shelves at a discount.

Mrs. Evarett, alias Gotching, was arrested last night on Folsom street by Detective Dillon, and locked up at the city prison on a charge of obtaining money under false pretences. She will not make any statement.

Inoffensive Telegraph Poles Suffer. "Yes," said Joseph Donner, superntendent of telegraph for the Southern Pacific railroad to a reporter of the New Orleans Times-Democrat, "telegraph poles along the line have a hard time. Particularly is this so out West, where the poles are costly and the stations are few and far between. Now, out in the Arizona desert the poles are played the deuce with generally. There is a sort of woodpecker that picks the posts absolutely to pieces, thinking there may be insects inside of the wood. They hear the humming, and haven't sense enough to know what causes it. Then near the hills the black bears imagine that each pole contains a swarm of bees, and they climb to the top and chew the glass insulators to pieces; but the sand storms are the things that create the most havoc. When the winds blow strongly the sand is drifted at a rapid rate, and the grains cut the wood at a fearful rate. It was a common thing to have an oak pole worn to shavings in a day's time, while I have seen poles ground to the surface of the earth during a single storm. Things got so bad out there that the company decided to substitute steel poles for the oak and cedar, but that didn't remedy the evil at all. The sand just wore away the metal on each side of the pole until the centre was as sharp as a razor, and all the Indians used to shave themselves on the edge. We finally managed to fix things. Just painted the poles with soft pitch. The pitch caught the sand, and now every pole is about two feet thick and as solid as a rock.'

A DEATH SENTENCE.

As a matter of habit he pulled out his watch; he did not notice the exact time, though he retained a general impression from the dial of a few hours after midnight. He did not recollect ever feeling quite so uncanny before in his life.

He had been looking over the parapet of the bridge, and mechanically counting the flickering reflections of the Embankment lights, but turned quickly at the sound of a woman's step. She was a queer sight as she came steadily up the hill of the bridge afoot. Her dress was dark and in no disorder, but, though the rain fell heavily, she wore not hat or cloak, and carried no umbrella. Apparently she was too preoccupied to see him, for she almost brushed against him as she passed, and yet made no sign. He was too astonished at her weird appearance to stir or speak. What struck him most forcibly was the brilliant deep red of her hair, which glowed purple in the rain-dimmed darkness when she passed under a lamp. But he followed her.

Half way across the bridge she wavered a moment as though undecided, then turned rapidly and peered down the way she had come. He hung back in the shadow past the lamp that lay between them. She seemed satisfied that no one was in sight. She leant upon the parapet and with a hand behind each ear to support her head stared up the river.

Goring stood still in his bit of shadow and watched her. It was borne upon him with some insistence that if she was not mad she ought to be; also though she might be mad as mad could be he had no prescriptive right to interfere nor any privilege to prevent her ventilating her madness in the particular way she found most pleasing. He tried to argue himself into the state of mind necessary for interference. He knew that he ought to persuade her to go home. If she had no home (which to believe was to deliberately shut your eyes to her garments and more especially her lack of them) he might stretch a point so far as to present her to the care of his housekeeper and hope humbly for forgiveness. So argued Richard Goring, but in spite of it he felt as though no power on earth could move him from his place; he stood as tied to the spot as a man with the sleep in his eyes is tied to his bed. He was half, half out of himself, his head and eyes thought and saw, but his body might have been over the bridge for all the use he could spontaneously make of it.

Presently the woman sank on her knees in an attitude of prayer. Her eyes were wide open and her head thrown forward, but tending upward; it was an attitude eloquent of one who prayed in a rushing flood of thought rather than in any measurable words. Her movements seemed to break the spell of inertia with which Goring had been contending. He advanced from the shadow to the light of the lamp. He stood there scraping his feet against the wet pavement; he was impelled by a neryous wish to attract her attention, After a moment of this he called himself a fool, and strode lightly up to her. When he reached her he felt more foolish than ever; she did not move, and he had no manner of right to touch her. It was a predicament.

He drew back a step. "Madam!" he said, after clearing his throat audi-

She sprang up and faced him.
"The man!" she cried. "The man has followed me! And I came here alone to pray alone, here on the bridge where there are no streets, and no men, and no women. It was not far Goring put out his hand with a depreciatory gesture.

"Ne, no! You shall not touch me!" she cried, shrinking back. The horror in her open eyes sent him sick with

"Madam," he began again, "may

With a low moan, like the crooning of a woman troubled in her sleep, she swept about, set her hand on the parapet, and vaulted it.

Goring, while he hung helplessly over, was conscious of her shriek when she felt herself falling, the vanishing purple gleam of her red hair, the almost imperceptible sound of the passage of her clothed body through the resisting air, and the dull splash at last. Each separate stage of the thing came to and went from him clearly and distinctly. For a second the place seemed flooded all about with a flash of strong light. The body was never found. The police, whom he pestered with inquiries about it, treated him with the due a gentleman supposed to be sane, but were at length compelled to hint that he bored them, wasted their time, in fact. His friends imagined most amiably that he had suffered from nightmare. Although outwardly he was still the Richard Goring of old, the man who lived, inwardly he snew it to be true of himself that he lived less by just so much as his new moughts took his life.

that his life was wrapped up in the life of the dead woman. He became

Gradually the idea grew upon him

sure that in the opaque past of a former state of existence a similar scene had been enacted between them, with a similar result. He imagined that in a dead life, far back in the unthinkable ages, the result had had a reason and the effect a cause, itself the germ of a since repeated history.

He imagined that the effect had been improperly worked out through his willfulness of stupidity; the history, he was certain, would repeat itself life after life, till the curse that linked him with the woman, and her with him, was complete, and he was at last enabled to save her from her fate, thus achieving rest for her and for himself. The worst was that now he knew he had one of his best chances and had let it slip; eventually he almost persuaded himself that the sin of omission was nigh to being mur-

Wherever he went he carried the burden of his memory and his theories, the few minutes of that night were with him throughout his waking hours with a merciless persistence; neither did they leave him when he slept. There was always and forever in his ears the moan sue gave as she turned from him, her shriek, the rush of her skirts through the air, the sinister splash below; there was always and forever in his eyes the horror of her stare and the purple gleam of her wet hair vanishing downward.

People began to say that Richard Goring looked tired and wanted a change of air. Some went so far as to tell him so, and he answered with a grave smile that it did not matter, he was only waiting for the death sentence. Thereupon, they would cackle for mirth in the dread presumption that he was poking fun at them.

Soon he was called to Bristol again. At Paddington he secured a corner seat in a first-class carriage of a corridor train. No one else got in; he was alone in the compartment. The train slowed up and stopped outside Didcot Junction, an unusual performance, for it commonly kept to its programme of running through to Bristol without let or hindrance. There was a stiff breeze blowing, but that did not account to Goring for the queer sound in the telegraph wires. He had heard the wires hum, and knew the sound as well as any other ordinary individual knew it. It puzzled him to find a reason why their humming should be deadened by now into a dull moan. He thrust his head out of the window. There, threaded and thick among the wires, hung strand upon strand of human hair! His mouth grew dry as he looked, for the hair was red and shone purple in the sun. The wires moaned miserably.

The train moved on again; as it did so, the hair went from the wires, and they hummed their true tone again. But Richard Goring could have sworn the voice of the woman whispered in

"When my hair twines again on the wires, there where you are-fol-

However, he cursed himself for a forgotten idiot, and fell to battling resolutely with the leaders in that morning's paper. His business in Bristol town was speedily done, but he accepted an invitation to stay a few days with an acquaintance who lived out in Clifton. He was perfectly familiar with the idiosyncrasies of the Suspension Bridge, and had been for years, but he had not crosed it since his experience at Westminster, which had given him a cosmopolitan distaste for bridges. He dreaded the ordeal of crossing the thing, should he have to; it was forever tremulous, and had always given him an odd feeling in the knees when he crossed it. He recol-lected the expanse of view from it which attracted you uncomfortably cutward. He remembered when you looked down at the people below what ridiculously long giant legs they had, with what small bodies poised upon them, and how each huge 'stride seemed to lever the little puppets up in the air rather than along the path. He had watched this entertaining effort for a while at a time in the old days; now he would scarcely dare to leave the curb side of the foot path. In the end he was driven over in his friend's high dog cart; he sat very straight with his tongue pulled back and the muscles of his throat taut.

It had come to the last evening of his visit. After dinner the host proposed a game of whist. There were five of them, so Goring was able to plead headache and was let off. As a matter of fact, he had no headache, but he was consumed with an overpowering desire to be out and walking. The house oppressed him.

He went out, leaving a message with the servant that he would go nowhere in particular, but would be back in three-quarters of an hour. His one conscious intention was born of an absorbing longing to sit and listen to the hum of stretched wires in a wind. He could hardly inform the servant of this. It was not long before he was sitting on some wooden logs by the side of the road at the end of the Suspension Bridge, and listening to the rushing hum of the telegraph wires over-

He sat there for more than an hour without any noticeable movement. Suddenly he drew out his pocketbook and wrote rapidly.

Presently he rose to his feet and gazed intently at the wires. "The hair again!" he said. He walked to where a lamp threw a fitful glare of light upward. "Yes," he repeated, 'the woman's hair again!"

Then he paid the bridge toll and followed her .- Pick-Me-Up.

NEW YORK'S, MONEY MARKET

Loans at One Hundred Per Cent. The Ups and Downs of Wheat. Fallures of the Week.

NEW YORK, Oct. 31.-R. G. Dun & Co.'s weekly review of trade says:

A market without anything but politics to rule it is not often seen. Business is almost abolished until after the election by the extraordinary pressure for money, by the indisposition of anybody to sell who thinks a great change for the better is near, by the feeling that it is now of no use to contract or buy when so little time remains before a decision and by the general absorption of business men in political activities. The indications show a gratifying confidence in preparing for better things, but an enormous volume of tion, and while prices of materials are strong, with heavy speculative buying, the absence of immediate demand makes finished products generally quiet in price, though with evident expectation of strength.

The feature of the week has been the pressure in the New York money market in spite of the heavy arrivals of gold. Quotations of call loans at 100 per cent or more have no real meaning, except that, with practically four holidays in succession, there is really no market. Commercial loans are almost a lost art, except as banks sustain their regular customers, which they do generally with a fair de-gree of liberality. The hoarding or en-gagement of gold to provide against contingenoies has far surpassed all records, and in exchange bought ahead, gold actu-ally withdrawn and contracts to deliver gold, if required, probably exceeds in amount $100,000,000. The makers of contracts to deliver gold on demand have imported over $10,000,000, it is believed, and ordered $500,000 more this week. The withdrawals of gold from banks for temporary deposit elsewhere, or by country banks at the demand of customers, have been quite heavy, and the buying of foreign exchange has made the market entirely abnormal and quite out of relation to the existing state of foreign trade. The railroad earnings in October have been 5.7 per cent less than last year and 6.3 per cent less than in 1892, though the loss has been less than in any other month this year.

Wheat's Decline and Rise. Wheat has declined sharply, but is rising again, closing about a half cent lower for the week. Heavy realizing on spot sales, extreme monetary pressure in carrying supplies and belief of foreigners that they can get what they want at lower prices by present abstention have materially helped the powerful Chicago influence which has labored to depress prices. But the evidence of great demand abroad grows clearer, and while western receipts are heavy, 7,562,927 bushels for the week, and 28,-756,644 for the past four weeks, against 31,150,964 last year, the enormous milling returns are of especial value, showing that foreign orders are preparing a great quantity of flour for export. These returns, not heretofore given elsewhere, will be especially instructive whenever the market turns on the foreign demand. Atlantic exports for four weeks, flour included, have been 8,026,558 bushels against 6,255, 412 last year. Higher prices and actual famine in parts of India have a speculative bearing, but are really less important to the American market than the news of the decreasing supplies from Russia.

Cotton has held up remarkably well in spite of trade estimates that the yield will be close to 9,000,000 bales. The trade believes such estimates erroneous, and also believes that present prices will not be found too high if with such a crop there should be good business in this and other countries. The mills are selling staple goods somewhat freely, and print cloths are a shade higher, but there is neither much selling nor much effort to buy goods of other descriptions. The speculation in wool continues and has taken during the past four weeks 28,321,100 pounds against 29,788,850 last year, and 26,538,503 in 1892, although less than half the capacity of mills is employed. It is a gratifying feature, however, that about 12 establishments have started during the week in confidence that business will be large hereafter. There is as yet only a slight improvement in the demand for lightweight

Iron has been bought largely by speculators, 25,000 tons of bessemer at Pitts-burg raising the price to $11.90, large quantities of gray forge raising the price to $10.40, and 20,000 tons, nearly all of northern iron at Chicago. Finished products do not change in quoted prices, although quotations are less shaded than of late to secure business, and there is strong belief that after a week there will be a marked change. The known orders deferred until after election would by themselves suffice to employ the works for a considerable time. Failures for the week have been 270 in the United States against 278 last year and 40 in Canada against 53

BRYAN ENTERS WISCONSIN.

Many Gold Men Among His Auditors. Ex-President Harrison Starts Off on Another Speaking Tour-Fairchild Gives Up His Fight.

APPLETON, Wis., Oct. 31.—The towns visited by William J. Bryan in the Badger State today were liberally bedecked with yellow. Not since he left the Ohio river valley has he encountered crowds so antagonistic to his views. There were a large humber of white ribbons worn by his hearers, but the majority of the people ad-Aressed by him on the first few stops did not hesitate to show their preference for the yellow metal.

At Green Bay Mr. Bryan addressed a crowd of several thousand people. There was not much enthusiasm at the start, was not into entire and a tast state, but before the nominee had concluded his speech, his audience was applauding him liberally. He spoke from a platform in Whitney park, ex-Governor Peck introducing him. Mr. Bryan said:

"We believe that the people are suffer-ing from the effects of a gold standard. That standard was fastened upon this country more than 20 years ago without public discussion. The very fact that the people knew nothing about it, the fact that their consent was not asked, nor their wishes expressed, ought to be sufficient to make the people investigate the cause of the demonetization of silver.

"This city itself was the home of Senator Howe, and he, in speaking upon this subject, expressed himself with an emphasis which I cannot surpass. His language in regard to the effects of the single gold standard ought to call to the attention of the people of this neighborhood that subject so that they will investigate it for themselves. But I remember Senator Howe for another reason. If I am not mistaken, it was Senator Howe who was one of the principal advocates of the income tax at the time that it was abolished, back in the seventies. If you will read what he said about the justice of the income tax, you will then understand why it is that we believe that an income tax is still proper in this country, and, my friends, while I am on this subject, if anybody ever tells you that we have not freated the supreme court as generously as we ought to, I want you to find out who the man is who criticises what we say You will find that the people who are best satisfied with the income tax decision are the people with large incomes, who are shirking their duties to the government and trying to secure its protection without paying their share of the taxes."

President Harrison's Tour. INDIANAPOLIS, Oct. 31.—Ex-President Harrison started by special train over the Panhandle railroad today on his speaking tour through Indiana, this time visiting the eastern and northern towns of the state. He was escorted to the station by the McKinley and Hobart Bicycle club. A few personal friends accompanied General Harrison, among them being John Finney of Boston, who will make several speeches. At the station General Harrison was greeted by a number of people who had gathered to give a parting cheer. He made no remarks, saying he wished to save his voice for the itinerary.

The Victim of the Robbers Is Still In a Critical Condition.

THE WORK OF HUMAN FIENDS

Mrs. Meyers Was Chloroformed, Gagget and Beaten and Then Left Tied Up In a Cloth—Detectives at Hand to Hear Her Statement.

NEWARK, N. J., Oct. 31.—Up to the present time Mrs. Abbie Meyers, who was attacked while in her own home at Bergen street and Fourteenth avenue, chloroformed, beat, gagged and robbed, has not recovered consciousness.

All day four detectives were standing around the bed upon which the woman lay waiting for her to give some clew to the identity of her assailants. The physi-cian who had been called in a few mo-ments after Mrs. Meyers was found unconscious was at the house during the morning hours, but could do nothing.

"If she is afflicted with any form of heart trouble," he said to the husband on leaving, "I do not think she can possibly recover. All we can do is to hope for the best."

As a matter of fact, Mrs. Meyers has been ailing for a long time and has been under the care of another physician, who will see what he can do to restore her to

The woman's husband, a hardworking, steady German, has been so stunned by the outrage that he is acting like one demented. The whole neighborhood is in an uproar over the occurrence. Scores of men and women are constantly around the house, and the women are outspoken in their threats to wreak summary vengeance upon the miscreants should they ever be caught. Full details are not forthcoming as to the outrage, and the detectives who are at work on the case confess that the task before them is a hopeless one.

Beyond the first few words which she spoke after the gag was removed from her mouth before relapsing into unconsciousness, Mrs. Meyers has said nothing. It is the theory of the police that she was attacked by picture peddlers after a quarrel over money. All night long she tossed about in the bed. Whenever her husband approached, she appeared calm, but the moment an outsider went near she would start up and scream at the top of her voice: "There they are again. Oh, take them

Scene of the Assault.

The section of Newark around Bergen street and Fourteenth avenue is sparsely The house in which the Meyerse live is three stories and built of wood. They live on the second floor, which is over a saloon. Besides the main entrance on Bergen street there is a wooden staircase in the rear, entrance to which is gained by a narrow alleyway. Back of the house is an open field, broken only by a stable and a hayloft. The opposite corner of Bergen street is vacant ground, but in the immediate vicinity are about 50 houses tenanted mostly by German families.

During the past few weeks that section has been overrun by peddlers of various

The attack on Mrs. Meyers, so far as can be judged, was made some time after 2 o'clock, and the remarkable part of it is that no one heard an outcry. Between the hours of 2 and 3 o'clock Joseph Wiegand, who runs the saloon, was playing penuchle with a friend. Neither of them heard the least noise. Out in the vacant lot back of the house and within 40 feet of it half a dozen men, two of them bicyclists, were making arrangements for a Republican parade to be held tomorrow night. They were there for at least two hours, but heard nothing.

In fact, nothing was known of the out rage until the eldest daughter returned from school at 3:30 o'clock. Not finding her mother in the kitchen, she looked into the bedroom and there saw her lying on the bed, bound hand and foot and with a cloth of some kind covering her face.

The little one ran screaming to the floor above, where Mrs. Williams lived. The latter at once rushed down, and what she saw she described to a reporter today:

"Mrs. Meyers was lying on the bed at full length and fully dressed. Her feet were fastened at the ankles with strips of cloth, which had been torn from a piece lying on the machine. Her hands were tied together by the same kind of cloth and fastened securely under the chin, so that she could not move.

"She was completely covered up to the eyes with a cloth, which was knotted at the back of her head, and which, even when I got in there, still smelled of chloroform.

"I thought she had been murdered, and, not being able to do anything myself, I ran down to the saloon and dragged up Mr. Wiegand and his friend from their card table. Then we untied Mrs. Meyers' hands, but she was unconscious. I went for a physician, and we sent a telegram for her husband in New York. Then the police were notified."

When the police arrived, they found that the house was ransacked.

It was evident that Mrs. Meyers had been sitting at her machine sewing when the two men entered. She had told her husband that she knew nothing until one of the men laid a hand on her shoulder and told her that if she stirred he would

She then ran toward the bedroom and seized a hatchet, with which she struck one of the men on the head, drawing the blood which spurted over her dress and There is every evidence of a desperate struggle after that.

Two Chinamen Escape From the Little

Colony Near New York. NEW YORK, Oct. 31.-Long Dong and Sam Loo were members of the leper colony on North Brother island. Where they are now is a question which the board of health desires to be able to answer as soon as possible. It will also be interesting to learn how the two Chinese escaped, for it is believed that none of the five lepers on the island knows how to swim.

The lepers occupy an inclosure on the south side of North Brother island and during the day are guarded by an orderly. The watch is not kept up at night, but Helmar Ennison is expected to keep a lookout from his rowboat. Ennison says he has a large space to cover, and it is all he can do to register his calls on the night watchman's time clocks.

The two missing Chinese spent the day sitting on the sea wall. It was noticed that they talked a good deal with three men, who seemed to be fishermen, and who kept their rowboat near the island a good part of the day. Charles Brown, the negro leper, is said to have called the orderly's attention to this. The day orderly says he went off duty at 6 o'clock and that he saw Long Dong and Sam Loo go to

When the orderly called at their quarters in the morning, the Chinese were gone. Dr. Steinseick sent word at once to the health board, and a detective looked for them in Chinatown all day, but with

It is said that Sam Loo has acted as servant to Long Dong, who is his superior in caste. Long Dong speaks English unusually well and is reported to have money saved and in the care of a cousin in Doyers street. He exchanged letters with this cousin, the addresses of which were in English and the rest in Chinese. President Wilson of the health board said that no clew to the whereabouts of the two lepers had been found; neither has it been ascertained how they escaped. Mr. Wilson thinks that it is probable that the two fugitives are trying to ge back to China. They have often expressed a wish to be in China again, and Mr. Wilson said that if they succeeded in getting there he would not be sorry.

There have been two escapes of Chinese lepers from North Brother island before. In each case the fugitive tried to get back to China. Each was apprehended.

DENMARK AND RUSSIA.

The Two Countries to Be Allies In Case of Trouble With Germany.

LONDON, Oct. 31 .- A dispatch to The Pall Mall Gazette from Copenhagen says that an entente was concluded between Russia and Denmark during the premiership of M. Estrup, who retired from the presidency of the Danish ministry in 1894. which places at the disposal of Russia, in the event of her engaging in war with Germany or in a war involving France and Russia against the dreibund, the whole of the available forces of Denmark, with power on the part of Russia to occupy Copenhagen and other Danish harbon and fort works. In return Russia guarantees the integrity of Denmark, with the restoration of Danish Sleswick to the kingdom. On the part of France and Russia the scheme, in the event of an attack upon Germany, makes Copenhagen the point of concentration for the allied fleets and army corps, the latter of which could be landed in Germany at an unexpected point within a single night.

The Pall Mall Gazette adds: "The government in Berlin have for a long time scented this danger. Hence they expedited the completion of the Baltic-North see canal and made other preparations. The agreement explains why, though the an nual budget of Denmark was a little over £3,000,000, millions were spent in fortify Copenhagen, which is now provided with the best modern armaments and the latest projectles and fort works, thus securing to Denmark the key to the Baltic."

Atrocities Committed on Both Sides—Ar rests of Wealthy Natives.

TACOMA, Oct. 31.—The steamship Vic toria, from Yokohama, brings latest tidings concerning the Philippine islands war. The Hongkong Press of Sept. 30 says that the town of Manilla, on the Philippine islands, is surrounded by a strong guard of sentinels and the residents sleep with revolvers under their pillows.

Pedro Roxas, known as Captain Lewis, is still in jail. The Press continues:
"There is no doubt that there is a good deal of truth in the rumor that the Philip pines endeavored to get assistance from the Japanese, as one of the active participators in the attempt, a well known doc-tor, has been arrested and thrown into prison. There is also a firm belief that pertain people in Hongkong have been as sisting in organizing the rebellion, and it is a well known fact that about a month ago one of the leading and richest of the insurgents came here from Manilla t confer with friends in the colony about de-tails of the plot."

Manilla papers at hand continue to record numerous arrests and dismissals from office of convicted or suspected individuals.
The names of 38 schoolmasters of various parishes in the province of Cavite are given whose whereabouts are unknown, and who, being suspected of having joined the rebels, are suspended from office.

In Cavite the position appears to remain as last reported, the rebels being in pos-session of the province, with the exception of the town and arsenal.

More awful stories are circulated of shocking atrocities committed on both sides. A woman who confessed the plot to a priest is now under the protection of the government, while the priest who di vulged the secret was among those caugh in the convent at Imus, and he was flayed

Arrests of wealthy natives continue to be made, and no one knows what their fate will be.

From the province of Batangas it was reported that late in September there had been a seditious rising in the parish of Tuy, in which it was estimated that 1,000 persons took part. Seventy men of the government forces stationed there defended themselves heroically, and next day large re-enforcements arrived, bringing the number up to 1,200, when the rebels were dispersed with great loss.

It was stated that the force in the pro vincial capital was sufficient for all con tingencies. The convent was fortified and 23 priests from the surrounding par ishes had taken refuge there. A volunteer force had been formed.
