Kosciuszko Junior High School Burke Reaffirms That "Big K" Be Closed In June

ENFIELD — Chairman Francis Burke Jr. of the Board of Education told the board Tuesday night he reaffirms that Kosciuszko Junior High School be closed at the end of the school year in June, as was voted previously. He said he makes the reaffirmation although state officials have not made a commitment to take over the building as a state-run "middle college".

The school is scheduled to be converted into a combined regional vocational-technical school and community college. Burke and Councilman John Reveruzzi led the town's negotiating team. They and state officials are in agreement that the state Dept. of Education will eventually take the building over but it is expected negotiations will drag on some time.

Burke said the school board had requested state officials to make a formal commitment to take the building by mid-October. That was last summer. The board granted an extension last month but again the state failed to meet the extended deadline.

According to state officials, the state's progress was delayed by a long illness of an important state administrator. Burke remarked the school board must begin the planning now of the school closing in order to make an uncomplicated transition.

If and when the school is closed, seventh and eighth graders will be relocated to the John F. Kennedy Junior High School and ninth graders will be relocated to the town's two high schools. The consolidation was made possible because of the decline in student enrollment in the last several years. Burke said a drop from 7,801 students this school year to about 5,4000 in five years is projected. He said figures show the rapid decline in school enrollment began in 1971 when it had reached a peak of 13,639 students.

Dr. Louis Mager, school superintendent, stated in a memorandum to the Board of Education that he is projecting a further decrease in elementary school enrollment of about 25 percent in the next five years.

His memorandum also stated that if the school system were to keep all nine elementary schools open for the next five years, it will be more difficult to lower the number of teachers as quickly as the student body declines because the students will be spread among more classes and buildings.

person with a hunger that a quarter of the global family lives with year in and year out.

In Memory

Students are being encouraged to make their gifts in memory of Harry Chapin, one of the leading song writers and performers of this generation, who used his gifts unstintingly to fight world hunger. While proceeds from his personal appearances, benefits and other events amounted to hundreds of thousands of dollars donated to hunger causes, he went far beyond the mere giving of money.

Chapin's legacy can be found in the ever-expanding fields of rice, wheat and corn from Cambodia to Zimbabwe, and his spirit will live on through those millions he has helped through his good works. Harry Chapin was a generous supporter of Oxfam America programs and a frequent collaborator in important efforts like the National Cambodia Crisis Committee.

Letters To Editor

Wants Positive Action

To the Editor:

Thank you for your recent article in the Enfield Press regarding the collection of "children's books" at Central Library, I have always paid close attention to the reading material of my children, and have had to speak out several times, both at school and at Central.

The situation at the library is not new, but has been gradually deteriorating for some years. Two and half years ago I made a formal complaint with little response. The trustees never, ever replied. I've heard they're just figureheads anyway.

I think parents have blindly assumed all these years that every book in the children's section was okay, as it used to be.

This past summer, the author Judy Blume was featured at the Book Club for older children. The librarian who presented that class told the kids, "I know some of your parents don't approve of Judy Blume, but I like her, so therefore, we'll devote a day to learning more about her books." At least one parent was upset about that situation. That librarian was undermining the home.

I think Central has been inviting criticism for a long time. They believe in no censorship for children's books. Under pressure, they did move Judy Blume's "Forever" from the children's section to the adult's section, and possibly out of the library altogether.

I am very pleased that you have brought this situation to the attention of the public. I do hope some positive action will result.

Appalled

To the Editor:

Many thanks to Yvonne Prestwich for alerting the parents of Enfield about what their children can read and "learn" when they are left alone in such a seemingly innocuous place as the Town's Children's Library — perhaps after a two hour visit they can qualify as "dwarfed" adults.

I was appalled to learn of such easy access by children to such questionable material, and I do not want my grandchildren to be subjected to it.

I strongly suggest some guidelines from the Town Council or other influential figure in this town so this condition can no longer exist.

Please, let's keep our children, CHILDREN until they are old enough to understand when they are reading destructive material.

FROZEN TIME

By DR. FRANK TAYLOR

THE CRADLE OF COLLEGES

Three French philosopher, Chateaubriand, wrote, "After planting a colony, the English first built an Inn, the Germans built a beer hall, the Spaniards built a chapel but the Americans built a school house." He could have accurately added, the people of Connecticut built a college.

The early settlers feared their theology might become diluted or lost in the vast new lands of America. The founders of Connecticut were particularly eager to create an institution providing education for the ministry. John Davenport planned to build a college in New Haven as early as 1641. He assigned a lot for the college and began collecting subscribers to support it. The Puritan Divines in Boston intervened and protested that the northern colonies could barely support Harvard and that a competing school might cause both to fold. Connecticut leaders grumbled, postponed their plans and even imposed a voluntary yearly tax on half a bushel of corn from each family to support the existing school.

Several years later Massachusetts hired surveyors created a controversial boundary between the two colonies. Connecticut was outraged about the apparent loss of thousands of acres north of Windsor along the river. After several heated meetings the Massachusetts government bought the disputed area. Connecticut used the money to move a small college in Saybrook to New Haven and Yale grew in prestige to rival Harvard.

Yale was a model that Connecticut sons tried to emulate wherever they went. They moved into the Berkshires and established Williams with Norwich-born Ebenezer Fitch as President. Herman Humphrey of West Simsbury became the first President of Amherst and Connecticut people established Middlebury College in Vermont. Thirty families and their pastor from New Haven moved en masse to New Jersey and began the college that became Princeton.

As they pushed west the Connecticut people founded Oneida College in upstate New York which became Hamilton. They were instrumental in the creation of Marietta, and Oberlin in Ohio, Olivet in Michigan, Beloit and Ripon in Wisconsin, Carleton in Minnesota, Tabor and Grinnell in Iowa, and Drury in Missouri. The closest Connecticut connection was with Western Reserve University. For years there was an annual interchange of faculty between New Haven and Cleveland.

W. Storrs Lee observed, "Relentlessly, generously, presumptuously, the propagandists went about the business of converting every foreign wilderness into an educational Eden. In remote Connecticut villages there were pioneer experiments in the training of apprentices, in medical and law schools, in singing schools and art schools, in teaching the deaf and dumb, in foreign language schools and in bringing enlightenment to natives of far off lands. A Foreign Mission school was established in Cornwall for educating Hawaiians and eventually broadened to include American Indians. A school in Plainfield specialized in educating Chickasaw Indians from Texas but eventually concentrated on South American Indians. The original institution specializing in educating American Indians was established in Lebanon by Reverend Eleazer Wheelock. He began bringing Indian boys into his home for learning and he attracted the attention of a wealthy Windham merchant named Joshua Moor. The philanthropist donated money and the school officially became "Moor's Indian Charity School." An honor graduate, Sampson Occum, eventually was sent to England on a fund raising tour and received a hefty donation from the Earl of Dartmouth. In 1770 Wheelock moved his Indian school to the frontier in New Hampshire. But it remained a displaced Connecticut college for generations and Connecticut boys soon outnumbered students from other places including Indians.

Another major college was planned for Middletown. A former West Point Superintendent proposed construction of the American Literary, Scientific and Military Academy and local citizens helped erect two impressive stone buildings. The legislature was slow to grant a charter and the new school moved to Vermont as Norwich University, the first engineering school in America. The Methodist-Episcopal Church was quick to purchase the abandoned site and create Wesleyan University.

The original music school in America was the Music Vale Seminary in Salem. The founders believed that art demanded hard work and were models of strictness. School began at 5 in the morning and included several classes and eight hours compulsory practice daily. No student was allowed to talk during practice. One southern girl wrote her parents, "Strict, you have no idea what Yankee strictness means."

In addition to all of the colleges a network of private schools, preparatory schools and academies supplemented the public school system. Connecticut's record for establishing a wide variety of schools and a specialized institution within reach of most of its citizens was never surpassed by any other state.

Thanks

To the Editor:
My special thanks go out to all the voters of Enfield who considered voting for me and especially to those who did. I can understand at times it is difficult to vote for a person whom you don't know. During the next two years, I plan to meet and speak with as many Enfield residents as possible.

I hope my work and representation on the Enfield Town Council during the next two years will be beneficial to all the people of Enfield.

Letters to the Editor

More Than Just Basics

To the Editor:
"Back to basics," for some people, means sticking to the three R's - reading, writing and arithmetic.

But societal studies is "basic" too. History, government, geography, economics - all these subjects give children knowledge to cope with day-to-day living in this complex age, as well as a perspective from which to appreciate America as a great place to live.

Parents can help with social studies schooling in many ways. You might try some of these:

Let your child see how government really works with a trip to the courthouse. Go to a town council meeting. Take the free Capitol tour in Hartford.

Show your child different life styles. Talk about the differences.

Take your child with you on trips to museums, airports, and the zoo and other interesting spots.

Encourage your child's interest in his family background by talking about the family, letting him talk to older relatives, collecting family mementos or making a family tree.

Make sure your child has research materials, such as a globe, atlas and world almanac. Keep them handy, and get in the habit of "looking things up" - after TV news shows, for example.

Provide your child with maps. A preschooler learns from puzzle maps; an older child can locate familiar spots on a city map or can help plan your vacation route with state road maps.

Connecticut is rich in historical sites. Even with the gas shortage - you don't have to go far to show your child where and how Connecticut played a great part in building our country.

Mary Cashman, President
Enfield Teachers Assoc.
Enfield, Conn.

Review Board?

To the Editor:

Congratulations to Yvonne Prestwich for telling it like it is at the Enfield Central Library. I took her advice and checked out the paperback section of the children's department. Her analysis is indeed correct: there are many books inappropriate for children's department: "How to Read Auras, Practice Psychometry, Telepathy, and Clairvoyance", and "Witchcraft, Mysticism, and Black Magic". Equally objectionable are the numerous books by Judy Blume. Blume's world is peopled with unhappy teenagers who apparently have no other goal in life than to become sexually savvy. My kids aren't old enough to read that trash, but when they are, they won't.

It is unfortunate that taxpayers have no control over the books their dollars buy. Perhaps a citizen review board ought to be created.

Susan G. Walker
Enfield, CT

Need Each Other

To the Editor:

The election is over. The campaign goes on. The Enfield Republican Club intends to continue presenting to the public their case for the people.

We meet at 8 p.m. on the first Tuesday of each month at the Pearl Street Library downstairs. Please plan to attend and see what we are all about.

Tax deductible donations can be forwarded to P.O. Box 177 at the Enfield Post Office. We need your help to continue our fight for the people of Enfield.

No donations are too small.

You need us, we need you! Together we can improve our town. We have already started. Can you ever remember any other new organization becoming such a force in only a year and a half?

Dan Clark
8 Putnam Dr.
Enfield, CT.

Smilin' Elf At Bazaar

To the Editor:

On Nov. 20 at noon, our noon, our community's holiday ambassador, "the Smilin' Elf" leads us down Rte. 5 and turns the keys to open the doors for the Holiday Happiness Bazaar. He's been at work 12 years, helping us bring to the Enfield community a beautiful holiday bazaar.

People have followed his smile for miles to reach Enfield for this event. But his smile doesn't stop when the bazaar is over and the odds and ends are tucked away in boxes for another year. No, his smile is only beginning, because all the participating organizations mobilizing the realize from their sales will be put to work in our area to help someone in need, run programs of importance and bring smiles to others. Smiles are contagious. If you give one away, you end up getting more.

This year, the Bazaar committee needed to open three buildings to hold all the Happiness: Enfield Congregational Church, St. Joseph's Residence, and Calvary Presbyterian Church, all located on Rte. 5, Enfield Street, in the southern part of town.

Eight new groups have joined this year. We extend a warm welcome to The Apostolic Church, Connecticut Lupus Foundation, Enfield American Football Team, Enfield Track Team, Head Start Program, People for Youth, Sunny House for Alcoholics Women, and St. Martha's, and welcome back the Thompsonville Little League.

Follow the smile of the elf and share the special feelings and excitement that holidays bring you. See you Nov. 20 and 21 along Rte. 5, Enfield. Yours with a smile,

Barbara Costas

Pointers for PARENTS

A Time For Rethinking Attitudes

The overwhelming trend towards families with both parents working suggests parents are rethinking some basic attitudes in child rearing.

A new national study underlines the fact that the number of working women continues to increase. Half of today's children under 18 have two working parents.

The study—entitled Families at Work: Strengths and Strains—is the General Mills American Family Report 1980-81, the fourth in an ongoing series on attitudes of American families. Research was done by Louis Harris and Associates of New York.

A strong relationship between child rearing and work or career is evidenced by the fact that many parents say their work has had an effect on their decisions about how to rear children, when to have children and whether to have children.

A one-solution blueprint for the care of children of working parents does not emerge from the survey. However, many family members agreed that it would be helpful if employers could make it easier for working parents to balance the sometimes conflicting responsibilities of work and children.

About half of those interviewed felt that the trend toward both parents working has had negative effects on families in general. The reason most often cited for this negative feeling was that children need more parental guidance, supervision and discipline than can be given when both parents work.

On the other side of the coin, most feminists and many working women felt that working outside the home had some benefits that outweighed the possible negative effects. These included added fulfillment for the woman, greater financial security, improved family communications and independence for children.

There was strong agreement among most adults interviewed that both mothers and fathers should share equal roles in child care. Also, the quality of time spent with offspring is more important than the quantity, most adults agreed.
