Confession of Genius.

It was sure to come. George Du Maurier has written a short autobiographical magazine article, including an account of how he happened to write "Tribby." It is time that the public learned just what symptoms precede such a literary feat, in order that any author apparently suffering from incipient Tribbygenisis may be treated at once.

The late Robert Louis Stevenson acknowledged before his death that he obtained the central idea in "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" while suffering from nightmare. It will be very interesting to learn from Mr. Du Maurier how he felt when he first thought of Tribby's feet and what he had been eating at the time he conceived Svengali.

There could be nothing more valuable to lovers of literature than a diagram of the room occupied by Mr. Du Maurier when his mind's eye first caught sight of pure, shy, beautiful Little Billie in his great act of being shocked. That Mr. Du Maurier will fully satisfy our curiosity on these points is well-nigh certain. Absolute frankness is one of his strong points. His potent pen stops at nothing, not even "the altogether."

Confessions of this character should be encouraged. They relieve the overburdened minds of authors and playwrights, and they may serve as a warning to young geniuses who are tempted to hold the mirror up to nature.

It Didn't Work.

A man who gives his name as James O. Mackey, goes to the Bridgeport jail to-day for foolishly attempting to flim-flam our "up-to-dats" shoe dealers, A. H. Hoyt & Son. This morning Mackey visited the store of the Messrs. Hoyt and approaching the senior member of the firm asked him to change a ten dollar bill for small bills as he wished to send the money to his mother in Trenton, N. J. He was accommodated with the ten dollar bill which he seemingly placed in an envelope. In the meantime Mr. Hoyt who reads the GAZETTE intelligently, counted the bills over and found but nine dollars, he suspecting at the start that there was some chicanery about the affair. Before the fellow had a chance to complete the bent of his swindling game Mr. Hoyt held him in abeyance until such time as he could bring an officer on the scene and make the results satisfactory to law-abiding citizens.

The intent of the swindler was apparent to Mr. Hoyt. It was in this wise: An oft told story; the f. f. intended after the supposed placing of the ten dollar bill in the envelope, by some hocus pocus getting the small bills back and allowing his "guy" to feel secure by leaving the envelope supposed to contain the ten dollar bill as security while he went out and secured the dollar deficiency from a friend.

Mr. Hoyt as previously stated is an "up-to-date man" and nipped the scheme before it had hardly a chance to root, with the result that Mackey was placed under arrest.

He was taken before Justice Rose and despite his tears of contrition and an alleged love for his mother the justice bound him over for trial before the Superior court.

"His tout ensemble was genteel but he had a wicked eye," remarked a young man of discernment at the hearing.

Saved Five Lives.

Chief Bradley was walking up Main street this morning, when he discovered several crates in front of Butcher Smith's, the living occupants of which were doomed to die. He became interested to the extent that he bought two of the crates and contents and will take them home in the hope that they will nest a sufficient quantity of eggs for his dinner on Good Friday.

Yale Freshman Crew.

The Yale freshman crew training table was formed yesterday morning and the candidates for the boat selected as follows: D. F. Rogers, J. O. Rogers, Marshall, Whitney (captain), Cadawader, Wilcox, Cram, McGraw, Mills.

George E. Cram is a son of Mr. and Mrs. George W. Cram of this city.

CHAPTER XLIX.

At sunrise I was in the saddle again, en route from Littlestown, where I had spent the night, to the battle-field. Not the sound of a gun was to be heard in any direction. It was the stillest Fourth of July morning I ever had experienced. The silence, though grateful after the two day's roar of cannon, was ominous. Ordinarily, and as generally understood, it presaged a renewal of the conflict, a lull before the storm. All was bustle about general headquarters, and about Cemetery Hill and Ridge. Little knots of officers and men were to be seen on every hand, discussing the situation, and wondering what the enemy was up to, and when, how and where he would renew the fight. Details from both armies were out on the plain, gathering the wounded and burying their dead. I rode down and out to rear of our picket-line, which was confronted as usual, by a corresponding picket force of rebels, but the enemy's "heavy battalions" were not visible. They were concealed in a wood north and west of the town, or were on a retreat. The officers in charge of our pickets, were confident that Lee was preparing another savage attack. Most of the officers I interviewed, were impressed with the idea that he would again strike us in heavy force, and this time endeavor to flank our right. This, undoubtedly, had throughout the battle, offered Lee his best chance of driving us from our strong position. Our videttes, as the morning wore away, brought in reports that the enemy was moving in force and hauling his guns to new positions. Down by the Peach Orchard and Wheat Field, the enemy's picket line was suspiciously thin and in many places not a man could be seen. If he was preparing to attack us again, his assault was evidently coming from the northeast, down upon our right flank and rear. I could get no information as to the situation at headquarters, for the best of reasons, no one knew any more than I did, what Lee would do and his military officers were usually very careful about giving conjectures to newspaper reporters. It was in the neighborhood of nine o'clock, when I interviewed Dr. Hubbard; he expressed his decided belief in confirmation of my surmise, that the rebels were preparing to stampede. I think he said that some wounded rebel officer or man in his care had expressed to him the same opinion. This was sufficient to start me for my telephone station again, and I wired the Tribune a private message, (it issued no Sunday paper then,) expressing my convictions that the rebels were either fleeing or fixing to get away and make a rush for the Potomac, but if they did, Meade would certainly attack them in front, flank and rear, and either force their surrender or destroy them utterly; and that there was no possibility of Lee's escape. I repeated the same in substance to the President and Secretary Welles, also that we had stood our ground and unquestionably won a great victory over Lee, on the previous afternoon. In reply to my inquiry as to the probable time of arrival of the promised supply train, Mr. Welles stated that it was being hurried as rapidly as possible and was expected to reach Littlestown some time during the night.

Having had my horse fed, and a few more toothsome Hanover sandwiches prepared while at the telegraph office, I hastened back to Gettysburg. As there had been no firing, it was certain no battle had been essayed. I had been about Howard's headquarters, perhaps an hour, with no changes in our front apparent, when the windows of heaven literally opened, and the weeping clouds poured down such a deluge of waters, as not seen since the flood. Was it great nature's convulsive effort to wash man's guilty blood stains from this sickening battle-field and cool the fevered wounds and thirst-parched lips of brothers, in blue and gray, still lying out on the field, in common agony?

Long after the noon hour, the fact did not seem to be suspected by our Generals, that Lee's army was at that time in full retreat, and only the faintest semblance of a rear guard of pickets, left in our front! Certainly it was not known, though beginning to be quite generally surmised. Yet no attempt was made to definitely determine the fact by our commanding General. General Pleasanton has since assured me, that late in the afternoon, despite the pouring rain, he begged General Meade to permit him to order a cavalry charge upon the enemy's left, and if found to be retreating, to harass his rear, and force him to a stand, or surrender. He said that he told Meade that he had a force of ten thousand cavalry that had not been in serious action, and had only served in covering our flanks, so as to prevent surprises and assault. He was confident that his troopers could at least dash into the enemy's lines and capture large numbers of prisoners, were he either in a new position or on the move. But General Meade would not consent to his wishes. General Meade's excuse being that it might bring on another general engagement, and that our troops were exhausted and in no condition to repel another attack. At that very moment, despite the deluge of rain and mud, Lee's army and trains were pushing on with all possible haste for the Potomac, in a solid line seventeen miles long. Pouring as did the rain, I rode down to where the desperately wounded General Sickles lay. Here I met Captain Frye of his staff, who was greatly agitated over a purpose to load the General into an ambulance, and send him thus to Westminster, and thence to Frederick, Md. He told me that the General was in a very critical state; that since the amputation of his leg, near his body, he was so full blooded that a tied artery had burst out at the ligature; that he was certain that jolting him in an ambulance down the rough, cut-up roads, over which our cannon and army wagons had come up, would result in another similar peril, and the General surely bled to death before he could cover half the distance. "But why move him at all?" I asked. Captain Frye said it was feared that the enemy was preparing to assault out left again, and should he do it, the General might be captured and the was extremely desirous to be put beyond any such contingency. "Why, don't you know, Captain, that the enemy has stampeded, has retreated?" I interrogatively inquired; "No, I don't, nor you don't either; we've seen his pickets all day, stretching from the Peach Orchard and Wheat Field way up beyond Seminary Ridge, and I tell you he means to fight us again." I assured the Captain that it was not believed at Mead's headquarters that Lee would, at any rate attempt another assault; before another day, as he had all and more than he could do to-day to succor his wounded and bury his dead; besides, the terrific rainstorm would deter him, even if he had purposed to renew the battle to-day. I told him a relief train would be up sometime during the night to convey our wounded to Baltimore and Washington which the General had best await. "Up where?" impatiently demanded Captain Frye. "Up to Littlestown, not five miles to the northeast of where we stand." "How do you know; who told you this?" persisted the Captain. I answered him that Secretary Welles had telegraphed me this assurance this morning. "Telegraphed you! how and where?" exploded the Captain, with intensified interest. He said he must get some dispatches off for the General. I revealed to him that I had been running a sort of private wire, on my own hook, during the fight, at a not far distant village, called Hanover.

The Captain, becoming more impatient, it was agreed that he should meet me at the Littlestown tavern, within an hour, when I would accompany him to Hanover. Adjusting my poncho and mounting my well drenched horse, I rode at once to Littlestown, where I had him well groomed and fed, and then started for the village baker, having learned that such a useful member of society was doing business there, and contracted with him to bake for me, all the bread, his only stock on hand of three barrels, would make. The product to be delivered to me at daylight, next (Sunday) morning. If I remember correctly, the baker stated that his three barrels would turn out between seven hundred and sixty and eight hundred loaves of bread. I told him that the order was for our sick and half starved soldiers. I wanted him to make me the best bread he knew how and I think he did. Next, I purchased an old one-horse box wagon and heavy harness of my landlord, for $16, with the condition that if I returned all in good order, any time the next day, $14 of the money was to be returned. I had been further informed that our Seventeenth boys had received no rations on Saturday either, and were nearly famished, and so, while waiting the Captain's arrival, I utilized the time in the effort to appease their hunger early next morning.

The moment Captain Frye arrived, I had my steed hitched to the buggy, and we rode through the rain and mud, to Hanover, arriving a little before dark. The Captain got off his messages, I sent another brief dispatch to the Tribune and War Department, confirming my morning surmise that Lee had fled on, at all events had not again offered us battle. Captain Frye returned with me to Littlestown, where he mounted his horse and rode rapidly off to his headquarters, while I remained until daylight, to drive over my load of bread to the famished Seventeenth boys, at the base of Cemetery Hill.

HOYT'S OPERA HOUSE.

"Prince Pro Tem," which comes to Hoyt's Opera House next Monday evening, deserves all the success with which it has met. It possesses the power to charm and its bright and witty dialogue, its tuneful score and its original story, are as refreshing to a jaded theatre-goer as a shower on a baked summer's day. Fred Lennox as Tommy Tompkins, proclaims himself one of the easiest going comedians on the stage and while his voice is not as strong as it might be, yet he makes up for what he lacks in that direction by the expression he gives to his songs. The whole opera is a light creation of great merit as an entertainer and the company we shall see Monday evening will be the same precisely as played here at short time ago.

HOYT'S OPERA HOUSE.

Mr. Underhill says there is a genuine "Mrs. Malaprop" now living in Washington who told him the thing she most admired in a magnificent new house she had just been inspecting was "the spiral staircase." It was at one of Mrs. Cleveland's receptions and a Senator who stood near remarked, "I presume she means the back stairs."

It was "Bob Acres" who said, "he who fights and runs away, may live to fight another day." Poor Bob! If he couldn't get a wife without fighting for her he would live a bachelor all his days.

A full house will doubtless greet Mr. Underhill Tuesday night at Hoyt's.

A BAD MAN.

Andrew Budra Makes Things Lively for Sheriff Clarkson and Constable Ireland.

Makes an Attempt to Burn His Clothing this Morning.

Several days ago Andrew Budra, a giant Hungarian, was arrested on the charge of vagrancy. At the time of his arrest it was known that he was acting queerly and in order to get him away he was arrested on the above charge.

When brought before Justice A. W. Smith he was sent to Bridgeport jail.

At the jail the authorities noticed that he was "a little off" but no particular attention was paid to him until Wednesday when he smashed about $17 worth of glass and became unmanageable. The jail officials at once notified the Selectmen to come and take him away.

Yesterday morning Selectmen Raymond and Thomas in company with Constable Samuel Ireland left on the 10 o'clock train for Bridgeport to bring him back here until arrangements could be made to send him to the Tariffville asylum.

Arriving at the jail Budra was turned over to them and in company with a Bridgeport policeman, Constable Ireland started for the depot with the Selectmen following behind.

Budra walked along quietly until he took it into his head that he did not want the officers with him and turned up another street, but as it would bring him nearer the depot the officers did not object.

Suddenly, without warning, Budra made a dash for a pile of stones and grasping one in each hand drew himself up and threatened to brain the officers. The Bridgeport policeman did not care to tackle him and walked away, while Constable Ireland knowing that Budra was a giant in strength, thought discretion the better part of valor, soon followed the officer and made his way to the depot to join the Selectmen, leaving Budra master of the situation.

The Selectmen and Constable Ireland took the train for Norwalk and on their arrival notified the South Norwalk police to keep a look out for him as it was thought he would return.

The police kept watch and were rewarded about 5 o'clock by seeing Budra walking up Washington street. When he had nearly reached the corner of South Main street, officers Decker and Pennington and Detective Gladstone grabbed him and took him to the station house on Haviland street and locked him up.

The prisoner was thoroughly mad but made no resistance to the officers and it was thought that he would remain quietly in the cell until taken to an asylum.

Nothing was heard from Budra during the night but this morning when Chief Vollmer went into the station house he found that the madman had taken off his coat, vest and shoes and piled them in one corner of the cell and after placing his hat on top had deliberately set fire to them. The Chief attempted to pull the burning clothing out between the bars but Budra would not allow him to do it, so the Chief attached a small garden hose to the hydrant and soon put out the fire and thoroughly washed out the cell. During the Chief's efforts Budra calmly sat on the hammock in his cell and puffed a cigarette.

The selectmen received a dispatch from Tariffville, this morning, saying that they are now making an effort to get him taken in at Middletown. If successful he will be sent there at once.

Town Court Bill Reported.

The Judiciary committee, yesterday, reported favorable on the bill establishing a town court in Norwalk.

He Stole Oats.

For some weeks past the Messrs. Holmes, Keeler & Selleck Co., and James H. Magner, of Smith street, have been missing oats. A watch was placed to detect the guilty parties but without satisfactory results. Wednesday night, Officer Bartram was escorting two "knights of the road" to the tramp quarters when his attention was attracted to a man coming out of the Meeker Brothers coal yard with a bag of oats on his back. The officer recognized the man as being Edward Anderson, colored. As soon as Anderson saw the officer he dropped the bag and ran, followed by a couple of shots fired by the officer who had called on him to stop. Anderson made good his escape and all efforts to locate him have as yet been futile.

Anderson is an old offender and if captured he will probably be given the full extent of the law.

Narrow Escape.

William Collins, a brakeman on the Berkshire division of the Consolidated road, had a narrow escape from being killed yesterday, by the bridge near the elevator in Bridgeport. He was riding on top of the car and did not notice the bridge. He was struck and knocked off, falling on his back. Fortunately he fell clear of the train. He was badly bruised and sustained a severe cut on the back of his head.

Consul Hatch's Expulsion.

WASHINGTON, March 29.—The text of Great Britain's ultimatum to Nicaragua has been made public. It is signed by Lord Kimberley and is addressed to Señor Barrios. The following are salient passages:

"With regard to the conduct of Mr. Hatch, her majesty's government are satisfied from the reports of her majesty's naval officers that it was perfectly correct during the time that he acted as British consul."

"I have only to request that you will, without delay, inform the Nicaraguan government that her majesty's government cannot admit that any adequate or reliable evidence has been produced to justify the arbitrary and violent action taken against the queen's subjects. They hold the Nicaraguan government responsible for these proceedings, and they must require them to pay the sum of $15,000 on account of their action in arresting, imprisoning and expelling those British subjects. Further, to cancel unconditionally the decrees of exile issued against them and to agree to the constitution of a commission to assess the losses sustained by them in their property or goods in the reserve, owing to the action of the Nicaraguan authorities."

"Such commission to be composed of a British representative, a Nicaraguan representative and a jurist, not a citizen of any American state, to be selected by agreement between the Nicaraguan government and the government of her majesty, and failing such agreement by the president of the Swiss republic. The findings of the commission to be by a majority and the awards to be final and to be paid within three months of the conclusion of their labors."

"In previous letters I have explained that her majesty's government is not prepared to discuss any question with regard to the treaty of Managua and the recent proceedings in the Mosquito reserve until this matter of the arrest and imprisonment of British subjects has been disposed of. To this determination her majesty's government intend to adhere, but so soon as the demands which I have made in my present note have been satisfied I shall be prepared to receive and consider in a friendly spirit any representations on those questions which the Nicaraguan government may desire to make to her majesty's government."

WILL LI'S TASK FAIL?

The Sentiment In Japan With Regard to Establishing Peace.

ALLEGED PLOT AGAINST LI.

It Is Asserted That His Selection as Envoy Is but Part of a Plan to Ruin Him. If So, His Enemies May Yet Be Greatly Surprised.

VICTORIA, B. C., March 29.—Yokohama advices have arrived by steamship Tacoma. They contain the following: The reasons why Japan is for the first time hopeful with regard to China's overtures for peace can now be explained. By means of indirect correspondence through the legations of the United States in Tokyo and Peking it was discovered that the reluctance of the Chinese emperor to confer full power upon an ambassador was caused by his dread that Japanese conditions of peace would be overwhelmingly oppressive, and that it would therefore be unsafe to authorize any delegate to discuss them on his own responsibility. With a genuine desire to facilitate progress the Japanese government decided shortly after the departure of the unacceptable messengers, Chang and Shao, to waive the point which they had previously maintained with firmness and to relieve their adversary of his worst apprehension by communicating an outline of the terms to be exacted. This was done also through the medium of American legations, with the result that Li Hung Chang was immediately designated to act as ambassador, and the strongest assurances were given Mr. Denby that on this occasion the credentials should be satisfactory in every particular.

China Will Not Be Degraded. It is not understood that Japan's purposes have been disclosed minutely, but enough has been imparted to show that China need not fear absolute degradation or imposition of burdens, and details will remain open in the discussion. Whether the Peking government will or will not abuse the generosity of her conquerors in thus clearing the path of the conquered has yet to be ascertained. The representatives of foreign powers in both countries appear to be united in the belief that peace is near at hand. The Japanese minister of state is disposed to concur in this opinion, though not perhaps with unqualified trust.

There are some features of the Chinese proceedings which are not calculated to inspire complete confidence. Never before has the Manchoo court conferred authority to deal with such vital questions as are now at issue upon an official of Li Hung Chang's standing or upon one of pure Chinese blood. Negotiations for peace with foreign nations have always proved illusive unless conducted by a member of the reigning family. For a short time it was given out that Prince Kung would be selected to lead the embassy, and his appointment would certainly have met better the requirements of the situation. It would be a serious matter to disavow and discredit the sovereign's uncle, whereas the viceroy of the Chili provinces would have lost his head at a moment's notice if he considered it expedient to thus dispose of him. The treatment he has undergone in the past six months has afforded a sample of the evidence of the slight hold he has upon the imperial good will.

Li Will Not Be Bunkoed. Not a few of his countrymen believe that his mission to Japan is in pursuance of a scheme for his utter ruin, and that however his errand terminates he will be proclaimed faithless and doomed to death. The majority think that so skilled an expert in laying traps for victims is not likely to be lured unawares to his own destruction. It is a notorious fact that since last September none of the troops gathered under his standard have taken any part in the war. They are the best drilled forces in China, but although repeatedly requested to join the army in the field they have refused to listen to any leader but their patron viceroy, who keeps them distributed mainly in the adjoining province of Shang-tung, always ready to respond to his summons. If during his absence in Japan his enemies get the upper hand, he will still have the means to execute a great coup, which in a last extremity he is believed to be capable of.

Li's Condition Not Serious.

HIROSHIMA, March 29.—The condition of Viceroy Li Hung Chang is pronounced by his attending physicians to be favorable, and no serious consequences need be feared as a result of the wound in his cheek.

Turkey Is Becoming Gracious.

CONSTANTINOPLE, March 29.—In response to the joint representations of the envoys of Great Britain, France and Russia, the Turkish government has promised to order the provincial governor to protect the Christians of Diarbekir, Asiatic Turkey, who are said to be in danger.

Prominent Man's Alleged Forgery.

SADDLE HORSES A SPECIALTY

SIGN OF THE ARROW.

"The beginnin' of it all happened nigh on to twenty years ago," he resumed in response to our request for the story, "one time when I'd been out prospectin' round about San Felipe, and was on my way for more grub and powder and a new outfit of tools. It was a sizzlin' hot September afternoon, and I was takin' it kind of easy havin' nothin' much to hurry me, and was joggin' along on my mule just fast enough to keep my pack burro movin' ahead of me.

"I was gazin' up in the air, shadin' my eyes as best I could, to find how much the sun had dropped since I'd looked last, when I see, 'way up above the trail, half a mile ahead, what at first sight—with my eyes bein' dazzled—I took for a little floatin' cloud. Then, next minute when I see it sailin' 'round in a circle, and each time it made a round droppin' a little lower, I knew it wa'n't no cloud, but a bird, just one of them big California vultures, 9 feet from tip to tip of his wings if he was an inch.

"All to once the pack burro pricked her ears out forward, snorted and crowded 'round back on the trail, and my mule got to tremblin' and come to a dead stop. I hollered to the jenny and headed her off, as she was stampedin' back the way we'd come, and when I'd got her cornered in among some rocks, I hitched her and the mule short up to a bowlder and walked back to see what had scared 'em.

"I didn't wonder they was rattled when I seen what it was. There, lying sprawled out on his back across the trail, shot through the head, was a man with his face turned up to the sun.

"I see just in a minute who the man was lyin' there, he havin' been pretty well known in them parts, and havin' a scared, scowlin' kind of face, which you didn't have to see more'n once to recollect it.

His and his brother'd lived for the past five years up in among the pion timber, way back on the upper slope of the same range of hills, alongside of which I was travelin', and there wa'n't but few men between the Colorado and White Water as could speak of 'em even without gettin' mad clean through, though they didn't care much to meddle with 'em really, bein' mostly just good, long distance talkers. One brother'd been killed the spring before, while actin' sort of fresh at an Indian fiesta, and now here was the other laid out, too.

"There'd been somethin' of a mystery about them two brothers, but more 'specially about the four or five men who'd gone up different times near their cabin, and never'd been afterward any ways heard from. Then, too, they'd been considerable conjecturin' as to them brothers bein' the ones what had got clean off with a good many express boxes and mail sacks from the desert stage line, and if they was, as to what they'd ever done with the coin and bullion they must have collected. They never was known to spend nothin' and so it was generally allowed they must have it all on hand cached somewhere.

"Havin' all these ideas runnin' through my head, and bein' though you mightn't think it, naturally curious minded and willin' to take no 'end of trouble to find out about things, no matter how triflin', which I didn't know and took interest in, as I stood there with the shadow of the vulture movin' like a little cloud over the sand—he not seemin' half so much scared at me bein' there as I'd been expectin' and sort of wished he had—I got to ponderin' and plannin'.

"Why not," says I to myself, "go on up to the cabin among the pions and examine into things up there, now there's nobody to hinder?"

"Havin' concluded I'd make the trip, I didn't waste no time in startin', and, by hustling along pretty lively I managed to round up at the cabin a little after sundown. It seemed a gloomy kind of place to stop at, looking a long ways dismaler than the bare, hot sand and rocks of the desert down below. Nothin' all around but a low, scatterin' growth of scrubby pions, just thick enough to shut out the view any way you'd look. There was a low, two roomed cabin, with the mud all droppin' out of the chinks and the bark peelin' off the logs; a brush shed for stock and a little shake granary, with a warped door hangin' askew on one leather hinge.

"Havin' unsaddled and taken off the pack and turned the animals loose to pick up what food they could, I didn't wait to get supper, but started right in inspectin' the premises. There was a room in each end of the cabin, with an open space between 'em, just covered in from the weather by the roof, and some shakes nailed up across the north side to keep out the worst of the wind. Here the only furnishin' was a three legged stool, an old saddle tree and a stirrup leather hung up on pegs, a broken piece of lookin' glass and a ragged, moth eaten coyote skin tacked on the wall.

"I was gettin' discouraged and tired and hungry, and was just leavin' to start up a fire and get supper when I lowered my candle to look under the bunks, as a sort of finishin' up for the night of my examination, and there, under one of 'em, I see a big board box, painted red and bound with rusty hoop iron. Then I forgot all about eatin', and my curiosity got to workin' me away. I set the candle down on the floor, and, after considerable tuggin', got the box slid out to where I could get at it. The lock was gone all but the nasp and the lid was only fastened down with a hair rope lashin'. I unhitched that in just no time at all and took off the top of the box, bein' all of a tremble with excitement.

"At first sight of the contents I was considerable disappointed. Aside from some rusty iron junk in the bottom of the box there was just a lot of old flannel shirts and a faded canvas coat wrapped round a five pound baking powder can. Inside the can there was a piece of rancheria tanned buckskin, done up in a roll. I was puttin' this back again, feelin' discouraged all through, when I see there was some blurry lines and letters drawn on it in ink, and I unrolled it near the candle to have a better look. It was meant for a map plain enough, but of what, I couldn't make out.

"I quit looking out for anything else that night, and after I'd got supper put in my time puzzlin' away at the meanin' of the map and went to sleep still puzzlin'.

"In the mornin' first thing I started in a ain, and then, in a flash, the whole thing come to me. Everything seemed so plain I just wondered then I hadn't seen it all at first sight. 'T was Torros S'ation and 'W W' White Water, and the crooked shaded line was the hills bordering on the desert, between the two places. I'd known the whole country thereabouts for years and recognized every little bend and corner in the hills where they'd tried to set 'em out on the map. Then I see the little red cross was just meant to locate the rock, with the arrow and the figures marked on it. Now I was on the right trail it didn't take me long to work it all out. I seen the whole scheme and the idea of the map and the blood just rushed to my head as I took it all in. Under that there rock was the coin and the bullion which folks had been conjecturin' about; '9 meant nine feet out from the arrow pointed down, and '3 meant three feet deep in the ground. That was where the plunder was.

"Well, as you can easy understand, I didn't waste much time once I'd struck this lead in startin' in to realize, and I went stumblin' down that trail from the cabin at a gait which astonished the mule and worried the jenny considerable. But findin' treasury on a map and locatin' it on the ground I soon see was two very different things. I'd worked on the first proposition all right enough, but when I'd tackled the second I found I had a bigger contract on my hands than I'd been calculatin' on. I hadn't no trouble in hittin' on the rincon, marked by the rock ink cross, but there was ledges and rocky bluffs for miles each way, and though I put in a week huntin' for that big rock with the sign of the arrow, I wasn't any wiser when I quit than when I started in, and at last I give up beat and went in off the desert for the winter.

"Now, though I'd give up, it was only for the time bein', and I still kept the map with me wherever I went, meanin' some day to go back; but one thing after another kept comin' up to hinder, and it was nigh on three years before ever I set foot in that rincon again.

"My next trip there come about this way. Early one May afternoon I got in to the White Water station and found a fat man, with a long, curly beard and a sociable sort of way with him, monkeyin' with some little rough up papers just outside the brush porch in front. He said they were photographs he was dryin' off, he bein' a professional, hired—so he claimed—by some concern to make pictures of anything remarkable he run against down in that country. He wa'n't no ways particular what he photographed—so it looked to me—for he made a point of takin' a picture of me and my mule and the burro quick we'd got in, and thaid up to our gettin' tolerable friendly right away.

"He begun spreadin' out his pictures, and I stood by talkin' and lookin' 'em over kind of careless like, till he give me one of a big palm tree, growin' just in front of a steep, rocky bluff. Then I stopped short in the middle of what I was sayin', and for a minute couldn't speak, I was so dumb found, for on that rock in the picture, standin' out plain among the cleavage lines, was the figure of an arrow pointing to the ground.

"I give a gasp, and the photographer looked up surprised, inquiren' what the matter was. When I asked him he described the place where he took the picture the best way he could, and before ever he'd got half through I see plain enough he was speakin' of the rincon marked by the little red ink cross on the map. I must have been by that same ledge at least half a dozen times without ever seein' the arrow bein' as it was all mixed up with the weather cracks and criss cross lines on the rocks. I pointed out an arrow, which he'd no notion of bein' there till I showed it to him, and then he seemed pretty near as much surprised as I was, and asked no end of questions about what I knew bearin' on the subject.

"Bein' sort of unstrung with excitement, and he seemin' terrible friendly and interested, and the sort of man generally you could tie to and trust in, and me bein' naturally, perhaps, over confident, I started right in and give him the whole business, windin' up by showin' him the map. Finally it came to this: He agreed to take me 'round to the rocks in the mornin' early in a light pole board where he was travelin' about the country in—bein' a trip of only ten or twelve miles from where he was talkin'—and we was to divide even up what we found there, we both of us allowin' there'd ought to be, from all accounts, more'n enough for two.

"I was up before daylight—the moon just goin' down—potterin' 'round to get things ready for an early start, and was some surprised not to find the photographer's sorrel team tied up alongside my mule when I went into the stable shed to feed him, where I'd seen 'em night before. Then I noticed, with a sort of misgivin', that there was no sign of the buckboard, which I'd last seen standin' out in front. Pretty quick the hostler come out, rubbin' his eyes and pickin' out straws from his hair, and when I asked about the sorrels and the buckboard, he said the photo-grapher'd hitched up and pulled out night before, just after I'd turned in.

"Well, of course, I seen then right away how it was. That fat, sociable, photo-grapher's scout had just gone off on the quiet to rake in the plunder for himself, not wantin' no dividin' when he'd struck a good thing.

"Naturally I saddled up right away and went off on a lope, hopin' to strike the rincon before he'd got away, and try'n make his stay there interesting for him; but he had too much the start, and when at last I saw the rock with the palm tree in front, there was the mark of the arrow plain enough, and I knew where to look, there was nothin' else left of what I'd been plannin' and dreamin' about all them years but a new hole in the ground, two stove in express boxes and a dull colored twenty lyin' on the new dug dirt, where he'd dropped and overlooked it in his hurry to make his clear up and get well away.

"I was so sort of worked up and deathly disappointed, and mad all through, that when a little dicky bird roostin' on some brush near the palm commenced warblin' like he was celebratin' my being done up that way—

"Doubtless Melospiza Fasciata Fallax. 19. Lehman. 35 cents," interposed the Naturalist.

"Like enough," continued Calkins. "Well, his warblin' riled me that much that before I'd thought—havin' nothin' else handy—I'd hove the twenty at him, and couldn't find it afterward.

"I made inquiries for that insinuatn' photo-grapher, longin' to see him again, if only just once, but I never learned nothin' about him or the treasure.

"That's my story, gen'l'men," concluded Calkins, risin'. "It's getting late, and I reckon I'll turn in."—San Francisco Argonaut.

BLACKMAIL AS A HERITAGE.

The Cornerstone of Police Blackmail in New York Laid in Peter Stuyvesant's Day.]

In Stuyvesant's time many abuses of power and assessment were grafted upon the eternal customs of the town. Shortly after his arrival he observed that "one full fourth part of the city of New Amsterdam have become houses for the sale of ardent spirits, of tobacco and beer," on some of the business streets this proportion still holds good. He inaugurated Sunday closing, with the result, perpetuated to our time, of sidedoor opening. Fines were established for this, that and the other infraction of regulations which afforded the constables a legal basis for making reprisals. In 1653 eight men were constituted the rattle watch and were authorized to take "lock up" money and fees, which sums were to be brought into the house of the captain of the watch and held for the benefit of the members, a "divvy," as it is now called, occurring four times a year.

Thus extortion was put, as it were, upon a basis of police discretion and right; but there was a rule against setting up a social club on the proceeds. So the habit of police collections, contracted as a pleasurable duty, has been handed down as a vast and secret perquisite of the guardians of the public peace; and it must not be overlooked that from those days to these the police of the city have been in the personnel a continuing body. It was as necessary then as now to admonish the police not to use violence upon peaceful burghers.

"Burgher right," after the Dutch custom, was granted by Stuyvesant to please the citizens, and prevailed as a trading and electoral qualification of "freemen" into our own century. Stuyvesant fixed the fee of "great burghers," from whom municipal officers were chosen, at fifty florins; and of "small burghers," qualified to pursue a trade or to keep shop, at twenty-five florins. Partly from this accorn has grown the Tammany oak of assessments and reprisals on merchants.

Followers of shady callings in the early days were the spoil of the autocratic authorities, just as they have been to-day of equally irresponsible blackmailers. Some of the earliest settlers were freebooters from the Spanish main. Smuggling was as common as Indian cheating, and Stuyvesant and other governors, English as well as Dutch, were openly charged with sharing in the profits of illicit trade. Subsequent to the Dutch governors piracy found in Manhattan its chief emporium. Even reputable merchants devised moral and legal quibbles for engaging in sea poaching, usually under the cover of so-called privateering. The great William Kidd was peculiarly a Manhattan product. Gov. Fletcher in 1696 admitted that he had exchanged "presents" with the notorious pirate Thomas Tew, but explained that his chief desire in seeking his "amusing conversation" was "to reclaim him from a vile habit of swearing"—which parallels the Tammany theory that a proper way to reclaim malefactors is to appoint them to public office. In 1698 the Earl of Bellomont, who had succeeded Fletcher as governor, complained to the English lords of trade that he had endeavored to place four merchantmen, about to clear for Madagascar, under bonds not to supply pirates at that notorious trysting place with supplies, and bring their booty to Manhattan; "but the council, some of them being concerned in these ships," he writes, "unanimously opposed this method, as not prescribed by law, and because it was never practiced here before, so I was forced to discharge the said ships."—Century.

Realism in the Witness Box.

When Searcy resumed the stand, looking fresh and chipper, Mr. White handed him a 44 calibre Colt's revolver, and asked him if he knew it. He said he did; that it was Charlie Morgan's pistol; that he used it at the Aquia Creek train robbery. Then Searcy turned it over to Lawyer Shay for cross examination. Mr. Shay's examination was exhaustive, and traced the whole course of Searcy's life. Searcy's replies were terse and pointed. After telling of his travels in this country, Central and South America, Searcy got to the time of the train robbery.

His story differed only in minor details from what had already been narrated by the other witnesses until he came to describe the manner in which their masks were put on, when Mr. Shay dramatically whipped out of his pocket a large red bandana handkerchief and asked Searcy to put it on in the manner the masks were worn.

"Are the holes cut?" asked Searcy.

"No," replied Attorney Shay.

"Please cut them," said Searcy.

"I am not posted in the business," said Shay; "you cut them."

Some one produced a pair of shears and Searcy cut holes in the handkerchief, which he then put on in the manner in which he said they were worn on the night of the robbery. Then Morgan's hat was produced and Searcy was requested to put that on, and there he stood, the observed of all observers, an ideal train robber.—St. Louis Globe Democrat.

A Gray Rabbit's Nest.

Just as small boats always keep near shore, the short legged rabbit is never found far from a hiding place of some sort. Nature gave the gray rabbit a coat with a color that is a very great protection to him; and when he curls his ears and lies close to the ground, one can sometimes actually step over him without seeing that he is there. The ways of this little creature have surprised me many times; but he never actually paralyzed me with astonishment until one fine spring day when the mowers in the Smithsonian grounds were cutting the grass on the lawn, not over a hundred feet from the National Museum building. And there, on a bit of ground utterly without shrubs, bushes, or even flowers, covered with nothing but lawn grass, at that time only four inches in height, with a busy roadway and walk circling round on three sides, with the office of the curator of mammals in easy stone's throw on the other, a shop full of deadly taxidermists and osteologists looming up on the east, and dogs and bad boys literally swarming all about—there, on that naked lawn, was the nest of a gray rabbit, containing four young ones already so large that they filled the nest as full as it would hold!—St. Nicholas.

The Procession.

"Yes," remarked Mrs. Malaprop, "it was a great sight. First came the king, carrying a sceptic in his hand and wearing a beautiful red mantle all trimmed with vermin. It was a grand sight."—Truth.

Clover Bitters

Cures Cancer of the Stomach.

Mr. A. L. Lewis, of Springfield Mass., says—
A leading physician told me that I had a cancer in the stomach. I suffered terribly, could eat nothing but light broth which would stay on my stomach only a short time; I was very bilious and nervous, and thought that I must die. One day when my doctor called he told me that he could do no more for me; he said he had no confidence in proprietary medicines, but that it would do no harm to try.

CLOVER BITTERS.

That he had examined the formula, that it was purely vegetable and could be no better. I sent to my druggist for a bottle and used it. To my surprise, it gave me relief. During the past nine months I have used six bottles, and to-day I am a well man, and am thankful to say that CLOVER BITTERS has cured me; and I do highly recommend it for any stomach trouble.

PAJAMAS FOR NIGHTIES.

A Young Woman of Observation Protests Against Them as Unfeminine.

"I declare," said a young woman of observation, "this is carrying things a trifle too far. Here is a circular which I have just received from one of our first trade houses saying that pajamas are to be the fashionable night dress for ladies. Are they? Well, they'll never be the fashionable night dress for this one, at all events—the ungraceful, unwomanly things. Here are illustrations, too, I see, how we will look in our Japanese nighties. They are to be of silk, of all shades and qualities, and they are to be made distinctly feminine by the addition of a row of lace at the top and a ruffle round the bottom, which can be drawn in with a gathering string. Charming, I must say.

"Why, they're just Japanese bloomers; that's all they are. No, I'll tell you what they are. You fellows have taken to wearing these pajama things, and we women have got to follow the masculine craze, like so many sheep as we are. Now mark me, you'll hear heaps of stuff about 'sanitary dress' 'ultimate modesty of attire' and all that fold de rol. But it's only fold de rol all the same, and it's just stung to cover up our determined efforts to ape the men. Popular prejudice has effectually barred women—from the time, at least—from wearing 'pants' in the open, but women are bound to get there somehow, and now we are going to wear them nighties.

"As we say up at the club meetings, 'I hope the motion will not prevail,' and if it does, I hope the laws will be so amended as to make the wearing of pajamas by married women good and sufficient ground for divorce."

CLOTHING THE FAMILY.

A Picture Easily Recognized by Men but Not by Women.

"My dear," said Mrs. Bloomburmer to her husband, "I really need a new street gown. I am ashamed to go out any more with the only one I have."

"Very well," replied Mr. Bloomburmer. "Get yourself a street gown."

"By good rights I ought to have a bonnet, too. I haven't had a new one for three months and it's getting real shabby, to say nothing of it being utterly unsuited to the weather."

"Get a bonnet, too, darling."

"Then Annie needs a few more things. She can't possibly put off getting a new dress and a new hat any longer. A young lady of her age is absolutely required to dress well. You know that yourself, Harry."

"It is true dear! Get whatever is necessary and proper for Annie, and make her look as sweet as a peach."

"Baby Bess will have to have some new dresses, Harry. It is wonderful what a lot of clothes a little girl of eight requires. You wouldn't believe it if you didn't have to provide them and keep them looking at least semi-respectable."

"That is true, little wifey. Baby Bess deserves all the nice clothes she gets, and it is quite right for you to take a proper pride in dressing your daughter neatly."

"Then, Harry, dear, you need an entire new suit yourself, and a new hat. I don't think you can have noticed how shiny your coat is in the back, while your trousers have commenced to fray a little at the ends as well as bag at the knees. Won't you get a new suit, love?"

"I don't know about an entire suit, dear, but I was thinking that after you and Annie and Baby Bess were provided for, I'd get myself a three dollar pair of pants if I have that much money left."

Glad to Get Back to Jail.

Paddy Mulcahey is a quaint little Irishman who spends most of his time in the county jail, serving sentences for intoxication. He is a trusty and handy man around headquarters, where he performs odd jobs. A few days ago, when not under the eye of an officer, Paddy quietly took French leave.

It was thought he had gone for good, but yesterday he was seen coming for the station on the run. Shannon met him at the door, but Paddy rushed passed the policeman, saying:

"Let me in! Let me in!"

He had spent his brief vacation at Hilliard and was nearly frozen. The cold comfort of a box car was not to be compared with the warmth of his cosy cell. He washed up, said "Howdy" to all of the boys, and in ten minutes was down in the basement helping the engineer cord up a fresh supply of wood.—Spokane Chronicle.

All, All is Vanity.

Man that is married unto woman is of many days and full of trouble.

In the morning he draweth his salary, and in the evening—behold, it is gone. It is a tale that is told, and no man knoweth whither it vanishes.

He rises up, clothed in the chilly garments of the night, and seeketh the somnolent paragon wherewith to soothe his infant posterity.

He cometh as the horse or ox, and draweth the chariot of his offspring.

He speedeth the shekels in the purchase of fine linen wherewith to cover the bosom of his family.

Yet himself is seen at the gates of the city with one suspender.

Yes, he is altogether wretched.—Memphis Appeal.

An Important Consideration.

It may be expected that when the women get their rights they will become the head of the family and carry the pocket-book. Then where will poor man be? Under the present order the wife can help herself to the loose change in the husband's pockets, and so the two live on together in peace and tranquility. But how is the husband ever to find the wife's pocket? Men should reflect upon this before giving the ballot to the women.—Boston Transcript.

FRED DOUGLASS.

STORIES OF THE EMINENT BLACK MAN'S CHARACTER.

His Dislike of the Notoriety Which Was Prompted by Curiosity. How He Squelched a Southern Senator's Son. An Imposing Orator.

The passing away of Frederick Douglass recalls a remarkable personality. Was that ever listened to him can forget the marvelous oratory, the splendid appearing man? Frederick Douglass looked the great man, and nowhere more so than when speaking. There was something in his pose, in his bearing, the manner of that straight, towering six feet of humanity which, to my way of thinking, surpassed all others, and so far as ability was concerned, where were one more worthy to be a Senator of the United States.

For years, as many will remember, Mr. Douglass was in great demand on the lecture platform; and when I lived in an Illinois town he lectured one evening—following Gen. Howard in the course—at a town about a mile distant. He was stopping at a hotel, and as he was a friend of my grandfather, at whose house I had met him, I called to pay my respects. I was shown to his room, where I found him sitting in a rocking chair mending the fire with a large pair of tongs. He seemed very distant, if not surly at first, merely bowing and not in the slightest relaxing his efforts with the tongs. But on my mentioning the name of my grandfather, and informing him that I was that tremendously important personage—the village minister, and on his apparently sensing the idea that I hadn't called out of curiosity, but really to pay my respects, his manner changed at once and entirely.

He laid down the tongs, rose from his chair, and walking toward me, offered his hand, saying: "Pardon me, sir; I am very glad to see you. I thought—prayer seated"—with which he handed me a chair, reseating himself in his rocking chair, laid his head back and began talking. After a short time the proprietor entered the room and informed Mr. Douglass that tea was ready.

"Thank you," he replied, "I will take tea later"—and when the landlord had departed he said:

"I have been annoyed so many times at public tables that I never venture if I can avoid it." Expressing some surprise at this, he said: "Yes, I have had people leave the table when I took my seat; and the many black, scowling looks are quite as bad." Recalling his remark that Mr. Lincoln was the only man who, in the course of a visit, did not remind him in some way that he was a colored man, I held my peace. In about half an hour the landlord again appeared, and extending me an invitation, I went down with Mr. Douglass and had the pleasure of taking supper with him.

His lecture that evening was on "The Evils That Beset the Republic," and during the first part of it he read largely from his manuscript. He appeared to be ill at ease, and was, I observed continually working at the lapel of his coat with his left hand. Before long, however, he turned from the desk and notes, walked slowly round to the front of the platform, buttoned his coat, gave his mane a sort of shake, and then for nearly two hours made that kind of a speech which but few men in this world have been able to make.

At its close I went up to him to express the pleasure I had felt, and I recall that, as he walked toward me, he had unbuttoned his coat and put both hands in his vest pockets—expressive apparently of honest pride and satisfaction at the performance.

When I had finished my edifying remarks, he said: "I delivered that lecture some time ago in Baltimore, and at its conclusion a pompous young Southerner came up to me and began what he was going to say with the remark: 'Mr. Douglass, I am the son of a United States Senator.' I cut him short," said Douglass, "by saying: 'I have good reason for believing that I, too, am the son of a United States Senator.' The young man," he added, "didn't say another word, but looked at me turned and left the platform."

How a Dog Became a Teetotaler.

A lady at Westgate-on-Sea tells a remarkable anecdote of a dog who was cured of his evil habit of love for liquor. Some mischievous persons had so often given to her father's great dog bits of bread soaked in beer that Neptune grew fond of the artificial dainty. One day, when a large party was returning from a picnic, Nep was put on the box seat beside the driver of the carriage as he seemed too tired to run home all the way. He must have drunk some liquor at the feast, for on the road he fell from the carriage to the ground. No bones were broken, though he must have got a severe shake and a fright in the fall. The result was that Nep never once after that day could be induced to touch bread soaked with liquor, turning from it with loathing and contempt, the very smell of it being repulsive. In fact, he became a teetotaler.

Economizing the Time.

"We will wait a few minutes longer," said the pastor, "in order to give an opportunity for those who may wish to unite with the church to come forward and do so."

A solemn hush fell upon the congregation, but nobody moved.

At last a tall, slender, lantern jawed, long whiskered man sitting near the door rose up and said:

"While the young people in the audience are making up their minds on this all important question I should like to offer a few thoughts on the subject of free coinage."—Chicago Tribune.

Her Sweet Content.

In the impenetrable darkness she was alone with her thoughts. The chill of morning was stealing into her chamber. "He comes," she murmured. "My husband comes."

Tears sprang to her eyes.

"Unfeeling man,"

She hearkened yet again.

"Unfeeling man," she whispered, as she distinctly heard him run his face against the hatrack.

A sense of sweet content possessed her now.—Puck.

The Great Modern Remedy.

"Poor Thompson! I'm dreadfully sorry for him."

"What ails Thompson?"

"Why, he's laid up with rheumatism. Can't find a doctor who can help him."

"Why doesn't he try shooting ducks in South Carolina?"—Judge.

IS HE THE REAL THOMAS?

Opinions Concerning the O'Brien Now Under Arrest in Paris.

LONDON, March 29.—Several of the authorities of Scotland Yard were seen by a representative of the press today in reference to the arrest of an American named O'Brien in Paris yesterday, after he had shot another American named Wedell, Waddell or Read at the Northern railroad station. The detectives have very little doubt but that O'Brien is the notorious bunco stealer and all round confidence man. Thomas O'Brien, who is wanted in New York state.

TOM O'BRIEN.

O'Brien was arrested by Inspector Frank Frost of Scotland Yard nearly three years ago in Gatti's Music hall, London, on a requisition from the United States, after he had been allowed to leave a steamer at Southampton, owing to the fact that a messenger from the United States embassy thought he did not resemble the man who had escaped from America. Eventually O'Brien was extradited to the United States, but escaped and fled to Havre, where he was again arrested, but once more managed to escape and went to Lisbon. From that port he sailed for Buenos Ayres under the name of Corbett. Upon the declaration in the case of James S. Balfour, the fugitive ex-member of the British parliament, who is wanted in England in connection with the fraudulent transactions charged against certain companies known as the "Balfour" group, that the extradition treaty with Great Britain was retroactive, O'Brien fled from Buenos Ayres.

It was rumored here that O'Brien had been offered a free pardon by the New York state authorities if he would return and testify before the Lexow committee during their probing of the New York police department.

A FLUCKY GIRL CLERK.

By Her Dravery She Saved the Life of Her Employer, Publisher McConnell.

New York, March 29.—That D. H. McConnell, president of the Union Publishing House of 16 Chambers street, was not burned to death or blinded and horribly disfigured for life today is wholly due to the promptness and bravery of his young woman clerk, Miss Josie Sawyer, and L. J. Miles, who is also employed in the office.

As it is, Mr. McConnell was sent to the Hudson Street House of Relief, his hair and mustache badly singed, his hands fearfully blistered and his face scorched.

Mr. McConnell was using some alcohol for cleaning purposes in the rear of his office. Miss Sawyer was assisting him. Just how Mr. McConnell cannot now tell, but the receptacle containing the liquid slipped from his hand and fell to the floor. The vessel was smashed into fragments, and the alcohol was scattered over Mr. McConnell's clothing.

There was a lighted gas jet just over Mr. McConnell's head. The fumes from the liquid instantly ignited, and the flames communicated to Mr. McConnell's saturated clothing. The next instant he was ablaze from the waist up and was fighting for his life. Miss Sawyer screamed for assistance.

Mr. McConnell threw off his coat, but his hair was blazing and so was his shirt about the shoulders.

Miss Sawyer tore off her apron and threw it around Mr. McConnell's head, smothering the flames.

Mr. Miles, in the front office, had heard Miss Sawyer's cries and rushed in at this juncture. He took the apron from the trembling girl's hands and smothered the remainder of the blaze.

At that time it was thought that the flames had not communicated to the woodwork, but some of the ignited alcohol had leaked through the crevices in the floor, and the timbers between the floor and the ceiling below were on fire.

C. E. McBride, another employee, rushed to the street and turned in an alarm, to which the firemen responded promptly. After tearing up at least 20 square feet of flooring the fire was put out.

Bogus Bullion in the Vaults.

CARSON, Nev., March 29.—The Tribune contains a statement claiming to be authoritative that a bogus bar of bullion, composed of some valueless composition, has been discovered to have been substituted for a bar of gold bullion to cover up the mint shortage. This is one of the bars received by the present meter and refiner, Mr. Harris, from the previous administration. At the estimated value.

A Colorado Episode.

FLORENCE, March 29.—At Wilber Enoch J. Fabran, alias Frank Wagner, a miner, was shot by Frank Herrick in the latter's cabin. Wagner went into Herrick's cabin to compel him to sign a receipt at the muzzle of a revolver for work done, but for which payment had not been made. Herrick watched his chance, and when Wagner turned around shot and killed him.

National Guard and Civil Service.

ALBANY, March 29.—Attorney General Hancock holds in an opinion handed down this morning: "In my judgment, chief clerks as well as all other clerks in the staff departments of the national guard of the state are not subject to the laws and rules governing admission into the civil service of the state."

Found Dead in an Old Well.

PARSONS, Kan., March 29.—An unknown man was found dead today in an abandoned well about 13 miles west of here. His throat was cut, and everything tended to show that he committed suicide. From letters found on the body it is thought to be that of James Lykens of Butte, Mont.

An Aged Missionary's Death.

TOPEKA, March 29.—K. W. Moore has received news of the death of his brother-in-law, the Rev. Dr. Nathan Sites, at Puchau, China. Dr. Sites was the senior missionary of the Methodist Episcopal church in that country.

Belgian Socialists to Strike.

GHEENT, Belgium, March 29.—At a large meeting of socialists held here it was decided to commence a general strike on receiving the signal from the general council at Brussels.

Tobacco Tax Bill Rejected.

BERLIN, March 29.—The committee having charge of the tobacco tax bill has rejected that measure. The bill, however, will be read a second time after Easter.

SPRING HINTS

SOME GOOD AND NECESSARY ADVICE AT THIS SEASON.

There are Some Things We Must Surely Do.

And This Thing is by Far the Most Important of Them All.

Everybody needs a spring medicine—a remedy which will strengthen and invigorate the system, and tone up the action of all the organs. The change from cold to warm weather causes a depression of the vital forces, resulting in weakened nerves, impure blood, and inactive organs.

Our esteemed correspondent, Mrs. A. S. Gould, writes us from Garland, Me., some facts in regard to this subject which will be of great interest and value just at this season:

"Through the loss of my mother, the sickness of my husband, and the extra work which fell upon me, I was thrown into a condition of nervous and physical exhaustion. I grew constantly worse. I cannot find words to express that terrible feeling that existed through my whole system—a feeling of utter weakness and prostration, with strange nervous sensations.

"My right foot was so bad it was with great difficulty I could walk. I had to place my foot every way to keep from falling. My hands and arms were weak, numb and prickly. I was very tired all the time. There was a heavy dull feeling in my limbs. Nights they seemed like lead weights. When out riding a mile distance they would feel as though I had lost the use of them. I would move my fingers and arms to see if I could. I expected any day to be found paralyzed."

"Then I began to take Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy. The first bottle did not seem to help me much, but the second bottle did, and made me better. I kept on using it.

MRS. A. S. GOULD.

"Now I am feeling well, can do all my work and sleep well nights. I feel as though a great burden had been rolled away from me. I am doing a great amount of work every day and often walk, besides, as much as two miles."

"I think I will pass for a smart old lady, so much for Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy! I can truly say it has done wonders for me. I cannot speak too much in praise of it, for it has been the greatest blessing to me."

"I only wish other people afflicted with disease would try it—not one bottle, but several, in order to give it a fair trial. I truly think they would never be sorry. My earnest prayer is that this wonderful remedy may go out in to the wide world to sick and suffering humanity."

If you want to be perfectly strong and healthy, the best possible thing to do is to take this great curer and strengthener. You can be cured quicker in the spring than at any other season. You must take a spring medicine, everyone knows that, and Dr. Greene's Nervura blood and nerve remedy is the best and most certain, because it always cures."

It is not a patent medicine, but the prescription of the most successful living specialist in curing nervous and chronic diseases, Dr. Greene, of 35 West 14th St., New York City. He has the largest practice in the world, and this grand medical discovery is the result of his vast experience. The great reputation of Dr. Greene, is a guarantee that his medicine will cure, and the fact that he can be consulted by anyone at any time, free of charge, personally or by letter, gives absolute assurance of the beneficial action of this wonderful medicine.

MORE ROBBERS FOILED

The Net Result of an Elaborate Holdup Was One Gold Watch.

USUAL METHODS EMPLOYED.

The Bandits Declared That They Were Desperate and Then Promptly Disproved It—Aftermath of the Queen and Crescent Affair.

BISMARCK, Mo., March 29.—Train 54, which left Poplar Bluff at 10:35 o'clock, was held up at Williamsville, a station about 20 miles north of Poplar Bluff, at 11:30. The train was in charge of James V. Webb, conductor, and William Matias, engineer. As the train neared a lonely spot a short distance north of Williamsville some one pulled the bell rope, and the train came to a halt. Two men, one of whom had a red handkerchief over his face, and the other a mask of some black material, forced the porter, at the point of a revolver, to uncouple the engine and mail and express cars from the train and made the engineer run a short distance up the track with them. The robbers then proceeded to the express car and ordered the messenger to open the safe.

"We are desperate, you —!" said the leader, a man about 6 feet in height. The messenger informed the desperadoes that he could not open the through safe, as he did not have the combination. He opened the local safe, but there was no money in it.

In the meantime an alarm had been given, and the residents of Williamsville were arming themselves. The robbers, becoming frightened, jumped from the train and ran into the woods. Before leaving, however, they secured the conductor's gold watch.

It is thought the work was done by men living in the locality. Sheriff Hoge is scouring the country for the robbers, and they will probably be captured.

The train is known as the California express and is due in St. Louis at 6 o'clock. It consisted of baggage, mail and express cars, one coach and three sleepers. The point at which the attempt was made is known as Houk road crossing, and the mail and express cars were run to the woods of the Black river bottom.

The Queen and Crescent Holdup.

SOMERSET, Ky., March 29.—The coroner held an inquest today at Greenwood on the bodies of Jesse Morrow and his son Thomas, the two robbers who were killed yesterday in the attack on the Queen and Crescent train. T. R. Griffin, chief detective of the railway company, who led the defenders of the train, is mayor of Somerset. He and his assistants, Eddy and Altgood, are experienced officers. Fraser, one of the six robbers, was left with the horses on top of the tunnel. One flagged the train and mounted the engine, while the third stood guard on top of the earth cut. The three remaining ones attacked the express car and met the detectives. All of the band lived hereabouts and expected to get home before daylight with their booty. Physicians performed an operation on William Martin, one of the robbers, at the hospital last night. His intestines have three buckshot in them, and he cannot live. The Adams Express company sent word here that a liberal reward would be paid for the capture of the robbers who escaped.

Duchess of Buccleugh Dead.

LONDON, March 29.—The Dowager Duchess of Buccleugh, whose serious illness was announced yesterday, is dead. Lady Charlotte Ann Thynne, dowager duchess of Buccleugh, was born in 1811. She was a daughter of the second Marquis of Bath and married, in 1839, the fifth Duke of Buccleugh. From 1841 to 1846 she was mistress of the robes and was a close personal friend of Queen Victoria.

Fire Ends a Church War.

OMAHA, March 29.—St. Paul's Catholic church, the scene of the desperate battle between rival church factions two weeks ago, in which many were hurt, was burned. This settles a bitter church fight lasting five years. Both sides of the faction accuse the other of being responsible for the row. The church was guarded at the time of the fire by six of the priests' friends, armed.

Reception to Judge Springer.

VINITA, I. T., March 29.—Ex-Congressman Springer, the new judge of the northern district of this Territory, with Judge Winston of Illinois, arrived here today. A reception was tendered them at the Western hotel by the Vinita bar. The visitors left later for Muskogee to confer with Judge Stewart and officials with reference to organizing the new court at various places.

Another Dose of Sullivan.

BOSTON, March 29.—John L. Sullivan announces that he has resolved to go into training to meet either O'Donnell or Kilrain. Sullivan prefers meeting O'Donnell, he says, for the reason that Corbett stated that O'Donnell can beat any man in the world barring himself (Corbett). As for Kilrain, Sullivan says that the task of defeating him would be easier than before.

Work on Boston's Subway Begun.

BOSTON, March 29.—Governor Greenhalge and 500 spectators witnessed the official start of the work on Boston's big subway today. Chairman Crocker of the subway commission manipulated the shovel, which was handed him by Governor Greenhalge, who said that he hoped the building of the subway would bring that relief which the people of Boston seek.

Murder in a Schoolhouse.

GUTHRIE, O. T., March 29.—Reginald A. McGinnis, aged 28, entered a prayer meeting at the "4 B" school, drew a revolver and fired on Joseph Bradford, a married man, aged 26, inflicting a fatal wound. A feud has existed between the men. McGinnis alleged that Bradford had been intimate with his wife.

Hot Springs Smallpox Scare Over.

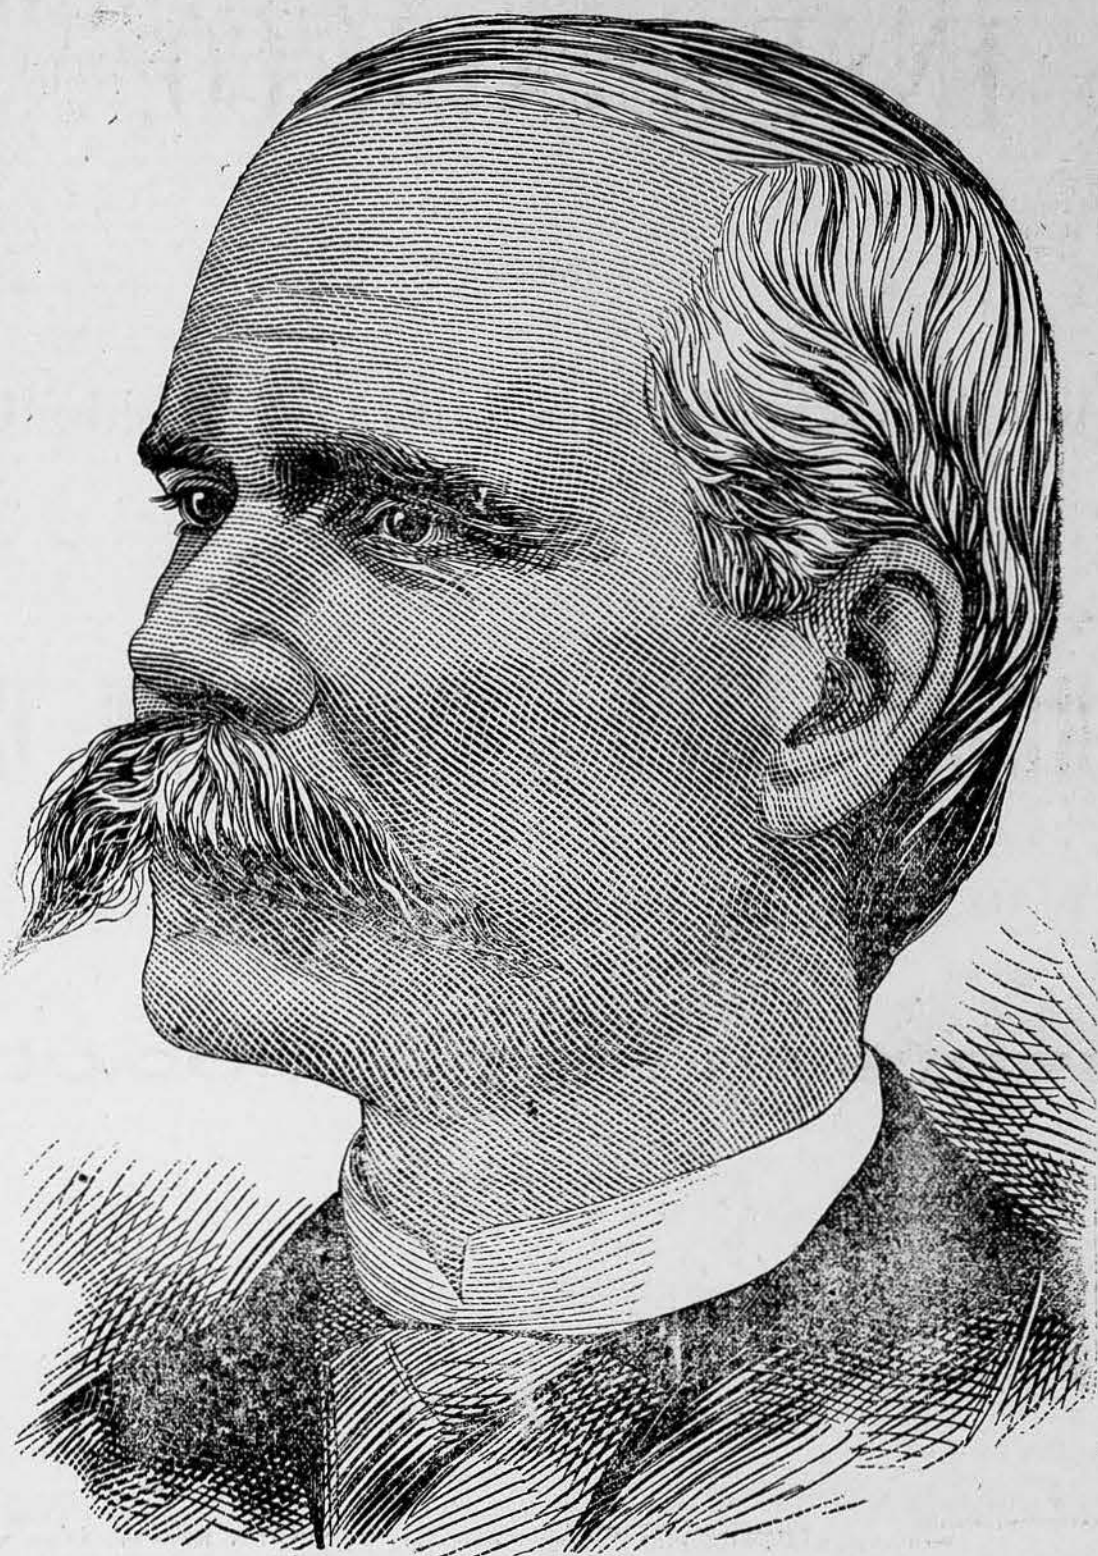

NEW YORK, March 29.—W. E. Hoyt, general eastern passenger agent of the Missouri Pacific Railway company, has received telegraphic notice that the smallpox scare at Hot Springs, Ark., is over, and that business of the schools, hotels, theaters, etc., has assumed its usual activity.

A Mare's Nest Destroyed.

SAN FRANCISCO, March 29.—The gasoline schooner Anita, which was suspected of having on board $28,000 of treasure recently secured by robbers at Ensenada, Mexico, has arrived here. A thorough search of the Anita by police and custom officials revealed none of the plunder.

JOHN NEWTON WILLIAMS.

Eminent Inventor of the Williams' Typewriter Owes Strength and Health to Paine's Celery Compound.

The old-time visionary inventor has given place to the practical, hard working professional inventor of to-day.

The successful inventor must now be a business man as well as a man of mechanical ideas.

The high tension of the nervous system, often kept up for months and months, makes tremendous drafts on the health of those busy brain workers. Many succumb to nervous prostration when they seem just on the point of surmounting every difficulty.

Of all the countless recent useful inventions none has passed through so many or so rapid a course of improvements as the typewriter. To-day the latest perfected machine is undoubtedly the Williams Typewriter, which represents a vast amount of cumulative invention.

John Newton Williams, its inventor, was born in 1845, in Brooklyn, N. Y. He spent his early manhood on the western frontier. Subsequently he settled in Kentucky, where he became known as one of the most successful stock breeders in the state.

But it is as an inventor that he has won his national reputation. Several most useful and important inventions were made by him before he produced the Williams typewriter, a machine that probably excels all others in the most important features.

Mr. Williams, speaking of the labor expended in bringing the machine that bears his name to its present perfection, says:

"Some four years ago, when engaged in experimental work on the Williams' typewriter, I was putting in about 16 hours per day of hard work and worry, and came near breaking down. Although very particular and regular in my habits and careful about eating, my stomach troubled me. It was difficult to eat, and more difficult to digest and assimilate my food, my stomach acting in sympathy with an over-worked brain. A friend had sent some Paine's celery compound to one of my business associates, and knowing him personally, and seeing what it did for him, I thought I would try it. I commenced taking it before meals, and it at once stimulated my appetite and aided digestion. I took two bottles and was much benefited.

"Again two years later I was troubled with nervousness and indigestion, and again took Paine's celery compound with great benefit. My wife, after her long illness last summer, and severe nervous prostration, and some trouble from indigestion, concluded to try Paine's celery compound, a few weeks ago, and she is now taking it with steady improvement. Several of my friends have taken it on my recommendation, and are now practical believers in its great restorative powers. I have found the celery compound a tonic and restorative that I could lean upon with confidence in time of trouble."

Paine's celery compound makes people well! As a spring remedy it is unsurpassed.

PATRICK

He Was the Oldest in the Service of Great Britain.

LONDON, March 29.—Field Marshal
Sir Patrick Grant, governor of Chelsea hospital and the oldest army officer in the British service, is dead.

Sir Patrick Grant was born in 1804.
He was the son of Major John Grant of Auchterbly, Inverness, and married, in 1832, Jane Anne, daughter of William Fraser-Tytler, who died in 1838. In 1844 he married Frances Maria, daughter of Hugh, first Viscount Gough. She died in 1892.

Sir Patrick Grant entered the military service of the East India company in 1820, and during the Gwalior campaign of 1843-4 he served, as captain, on the staff of Sir Hugh Gough, holding the rank of brevet adjutant general, and obtained his brevet majority and the bronze star for Maharajpur. He fought, as adjutant general, in the Sutlej campaign of 1845-6 at Mudki and Sobraon and was twice severely wounded by a grape-shot in the arm and by a musket ball in the left breast.
He also had three horses shot under him and was frequently mentioned in dispatches. As a result he was made brevet colonel and C. B., receiving a medal and three clasps. As adjutant general he also followed Lord Gough through the Punjab campaign, sharing in the hard won fight of Chillianwalla and the victory of Curjarat. At the conclusion of the campaign he was made an aid-de-camp to the queen, with the rank of colonel. Colonel Grant, in 1849-50, again served as adjutant general in Sir Charles Napier's campaign against the hill tribes of Kohat, and in 1856, as major general and K. C. B., he was appointed commander in chief of the Madras army. On the death of General Anson, in the first days of the Indian mutiny in 1857, Sir Patrick Grant went to Calcutta as acting commander in chief of Bengal pending the arrival of Sir Colin Campbell, Anson's successor. At the close of the Indian mutiny Sir Patrick Grant was rewarded with the grand cross of the Bath, and in March, 1867, he was preferred to the governorship of Malta. In 1858
he was appointed G. C. M. G., and in April, 1872, he resigned the governorship of Malta, and in 1874 he was appointed governor of Chelsea hospital, left vacant by the death of Sir Sydney Cotton. Sir Patrick, in October, 1885, was appointed colonel of the Royal Horse guards and gold stick in waiting.

In 1883 he was appointed field marshal in the British army, the highest title to be had.

A Large Malthouse Collapses.

PITTSBURGH, March 29.—The five story
malthouse at Wainwright's brewery, Thirty-sixth street, collapsed today. The weight of the grain stored in the upper floors caused the disaster. Every one in the building escaped, but there are grave fears that several passing pedestrians may have been caught under the wreck.

Venerable Clergyman Dead.

MIDDLETOWN, N. Y., March 29.—Rev.
Slaters S. Hopburn died at Hamptonburg today, aged 80 years. He had a stroke of apoplexy a week ago. He was born in Milton, Pa., in the year 1819 and was a graduate of Princeton college. He was pastor of the Hamptonburg Presbyterian church for 45 years.

A Nineteen-year-old a Suicide.

NEW YORK, March 29.—Adolph Meyer, 19 years old, living on Twenty-seventh street, between Sixth avenue and Broadway, committed suicide today. He shot himself in the right temple with a revolver while visiting at 164 West One Hundred and Third street.

A Poisoner Convicted.

CINCINNATI, March 29.—The jury in the case of Martin Adams, who was arrested for poisoning John Ohmer, returned a verdict of murder in the first degree after being out 30 hours. Martin treated Ohmer, and put poison unobserved into a glass of beer.

Carlos.

THE CASE OF WALLER.

The State Department Has Not Yet
Heard From Madagascar.

MR. LANGSTON'S STATEMENT

The Ex-Consul's Counsel Explains the Announcement of the French Government.
Great Britain Is Stamping All
Over the Monroe Doctrine.

WASHINGTON, March 29.—Hon. John M. Langston, who for some years past has been the counsel for ex-Consul John M.
Waller of Kansas, was at the state department today to ascertain if any news had been received officially of the reported sentence of his client to 20 years' imprisonment in Madagascar. Mr. Langston thinks it is about time that cable advices were received, but in this he was disappointed, for nothing had come to the department. Certain documents and letters from Waller bearing on the concession made to him by the Hovas government, and which necessarily must figure in the matter if it is taken up by the state department, have been filed in the department by Mr. Langston. The refusal of Mr. Waller to file a record of the concession in the office of the French regent in Madagascar, which, no doubt, has been a source of irritation to the authorities of that country and probably inspired the concession, are set forth in the document. Mr. Langston says the French government once attempted to establish a colony in the district where the concession to Mr. Waller is located, but has failed utterly up to this time for the reason that the French people do not seem to be willing to settle there. The French and English have had concessions made to them, but Mr. Waller was the only American who had been so favored.

Term of the Concession.

The concession as at first granted was for a period of 30 years, but upon an imitation of a possible objection on the part of the United States, which has a treaty with the Malagasy government, it was subsequently changed to 25 years, with a privilege of renewal. The local native government, Mr. Langston says, is heartily in accord with Mr. Waller in the matter of the concession. The idea that a man loses citizenship because he happens to go out of the country without a pasport, he says, is absurd. Mr. Langston has served the government in a diplomatic capacity, having been minister to Haiti, and he declares that citizens of this country, after they arrive abroad and find the need of passports and other papers entitled them to safe travel, can obtain them from the representatives of the government. The proposition that an American going abroad and engaging in any other business than that of merchant renounces his citizenship he characterizes as bosh.

As the result of his visit to the state department Mr. Langston expresses the conviction that the officials will act promptly in investigating the matter of Mr. Waller's arrest and imprisonment, and that they will by all means refuse to submit to the disposition of his case by a court martial and insist upon a civil trial, as they did in the case of Sanguilly in Cuba.

President Would Not Put the Motion.

BERLIN, March 29.—Baron von Buol-Berenberg, in the reichstag today, decided that the proposed resolution asking the chamber to take some action in regard to the emperor's telegram to Prince Bismarck would be contrary to order. Consequently he refused to submit it to the reichstag.

Big Blaze in Canaseraga.

CANASERAGA, N. Y., March 29.—The entire business portion of this village and 30 dwellings were burned today. The fire started near the Cottage hotel and spread rapidly. A strong wind was blowing, and the village had only the most primitive means of fighting the flames, and it was not until a special train had arrived from Hornellsville with two companies of firemen and a steamer that the progress of the fire was checked.

Gold in the Yaqui Country.

HERMOSILLO, Mexico, March 29.—G. P.
Wilson and Frank Middleton, mining engineers from Pennsylvania, left here a few weeks ago for the Yaqui Indian country.
Mr. Middleton has just returned and reports that they discovered a rich gold mine which was being worked in a primitive way by the Indians. The Yaquis, upon learning the object of their visit, drove them out of the country.

Fears for a Tin Laden Bark.

ASTORIA, OR., March 29.—Apprehension is felt here regarding the safety of the British bark Cupica, now 189 days out from Liverpool, with a cargo of tin for Astoria. Balfour, Guthrie & Co., her agents, have given her up as lost. Canning men here have ceased to hope for her arrival and have made preparations to use American tin for the salmon run.

Two Heroes Honored.

WEST SUPERIOR, Wis., March 29.—Engineer Ed Berry and Conductor W. D.
Campbell of the Eastern Minnesota railroad have been presented by the survivors of the Hinckley fire each with a gold medal in recognition of their services in saving the people of Hinckley when that town was on the eve of destruction by forest fire, Sept. 1, 1894.

Antitrust Legislation in Texas.

AUSTIN, March 29.—The house has passed the antitrust bill, and it is a very radical measure, so much so that prominent business men familiar with its provisions declare it will work great injury to the state. The house also struck out the entire appropriation for the state militia, in response to Populistic influence.

Important Saloon Suits in Vicksburg.

VICKSBURG, Miss., March 29.—Suits were filed here by W. J. Gilmor, informer, for the benefit of himself and the state against 14 city saloon keepers and their respective bondsmen for $2,000 dollars each.
Such suits are provided for in the celebrated "dramshop" charter for infractions of the liquor laws.

New York's Court Investigation.

NEW YORK, March 29.—It was learned today that the committee which has been appointed by the state senate to investigate the alleged abuses of the court of general sessions will hold its first session in this city on Saturday, when several witnesses will be summoned before it.

Carpet and Furniture Assignment.

NASHVILLE, March 29.—Weakly & Bros., carpet and furniture dealers, have made an assignment. Assets placed at $55,000; liabilities about $48,000.

Equal Suffrage Debate in Madison.

MADISON, Wis., March 29.—The bill for equal suffrage was debated in the senate for three hours and then laid upon the table. Among the bills passed by the assembly were those giving to negroes all the rights of white men in places of amusement.

McNaughton's Saratoga Bill Passes.

ALBANY, March 29.—Mr. McNaughton's bill to revise the charter of the village of Saratoga Springs and legislate out of office the present village officers has passed the assembly—69 to 15.

DAVIS HEIRS AGREE.

Made Mutual Concessions Rather Than Enrich the Lawyers.

BUTTE, MONT., March 29.—The rumors which have been afloat for some time with reference to the settlement of the celebrated Davis will case in this city have not been without foundation, for in the district court the alleged will of the dead millionaire was filed for probate. The proponents, Davis' heirs and contestants, represented by Henry A. Root of Helena, have been figuring on a settlement for several months and reported an agreement.
The court has ratified the arrangement, a decree which will be final unless other parties claiming an interest in the estate put in a legal appearance within a year.
The heirs have asked for the appointment of J. H. Lysen, a jeweler of this city, as administrator, and Mr. Lysen has filed a petition asking the court to appoint him to the position.

The petition here shows that A. J. Davis died on March 11, 1890, and left an estate of real and personal property valued at $3,000,000, consisting of bank, mining and other stocks, mortgages and securities, cash in bank, mines, real estate and personal property, and also property in Iowa and Massachusetts, and that the heirs at

THE COUNT TALKED.

ANNA GOULD'S HUSBAND LIKED HIS NAME IN PRINT.

Every Evidence that a Regular Literary Bureau Was Maintained in Connection With the Preparations for the Wedding. Interviews and Details by the Yard.

That the Count de Castellane, Anna Gould's French husband, enjoyed the cheap notoriety usually accorded actresses, is clearly evinced by the space occupied in metropolitan papers by the ante-nuptial announcements and gossip of the then impending event. That column after column of the stuff published emanated from an inner source there is no doubt. Why the great papers gave their space to it is one of those things one cannot explain.

Here is a story from the New York Herald:

"Hellas!" he exclaimed with true Gallic fervor. "I came to America unknown, and to-day I am famous. Each hour brings me twenty letters. There are men who want to sell me jewels and lace, silver and old furniture. There are others who want to be my coachmen, my groom and my valets de chambre. There are lots who beg outright, and many more who wish to extract from me the secrets of my soul. There is not an hour of the day that I can call my own."

"The manner of my going to bed and getting up has been minutely described. They say I lace and pad, that my father and mother are separated, and that I am to be a charge for life upon the Gould estate."

"My pictures are scattered broadcast through the land, my—"

A messenger approached the count with a note.

"Yes, and here is a man who wants to curl my hair for nothing."

"I came to America to indulge in my love of sport. I had heard much of your Western shooting and hard riding. I went first to Newport, where I was fascinated by the place and its society. I stayed on and on. Then I came to New York and to Colorado, where I had great shooting. I got back in time to find the hunting clubs in full blast."

"It was while hunting with the Monmouth County pack at Lakewood that I first met the Goulds. They were kindness itself. I was thrown often in their society, both then and afterward in New York. I greatly admired Mr. George Gould's cleverness and wide grasp of information. Miss Anna Gould was a charming young lady, simple and unaffected, but no idea of marriage or any other feeling than esteem crossed my mind."

"Then came the invitation to join their party to Canada. It had been my original intention to journey north and see the famous sports on snow and ice. It was during that trip that the truth came out. I know not exactly how or when, but I returned to New York the accepted suitor of Miss Gould."

"The brother and sister, her guardians, gave their consent, and it was when the Herald announced the engagement that I awoke to find myself famous."

Count de Castellane was talking for publication, but with the greatest frankness. "I have been misunderstood completely as to any settlements the Gould family may make upon me. The question has never been broached or even hinted at in any way. The whole idea is exceedingly repugnant to me and must be so to my relatives and friends in France. My lawyer has naturally conferred with the Gould lawyers upon those matters, which must come up when marriage is contemplated. Beyond that I know nothing."

"I have always declared against a long engagement, and only asked that our marriage should be as soon as possible."

"My great pleasure on getting home will be that I shall not find myself so famous a person there, and can then afford to snap my fingers at all the untrue statements that have been circulated about me here."

"I can never accustom myself to having my name so constantly in print. Mr. Gould tells me that that is the American way of doing things; but I must say that it is the only American fashion to which I object."

A Well Intentioned Man's Mistake.

The Well Intentioned Man overheard two women talking together in the cable car and he immediately let down the portals of his ears, for the Well Intentioned Man always goes about with a lifelong hunger in his heart to insert himself into the affairs of other people.

"I tell you he is a perfect tyrant," said woman number one.

"I haven't a doubt of it," said woman number two.

"I will listen to this poor woman's tale," thought the Well Intentioned Man. "and perhaps I may be able to assist the poor soul."

"Yes, he is a regular tyrant and despot. He has no mercy on me whatever. He rules the whole house like a regular czar."

"Of course he does," said woman number two.

"I shall have to offer my services to this poor down trodden woman," thought the Well Intentioned Man.

"Yes, he rides over the whole of us rough shod. And sometimes when he gets on the rampage he breaks everything he can lay his hands on."

"Madam," said the Well Intentioned Man, who could stand it no longer, "madam, my services are at your disposal. Let me go to your home and intercede with your tyrannical husband."

"He isn't my husband at all, you simpleton," snapped woman number one. "He's my nine months old baby—bless his precious little soul!"

An Extravagant Girl.

"A penny for your thoughts!" she cried. To the dudding by her side. Then she stopped to reconsider. And her calm reflection bid her Not to cling.

To a bargain quite as rash. So she spoke up like a flash: "Hold! That's what bad habits bring—in my extravagant way I always do pay About two prices for a thing!" —Chicago Record.

One Habit Corrected.

"I don't know whether I will be able to break him of all the habits I do not like," said the engaged girl, "but the first one I stopped for him was just as easy."

"What habit was that?" asked the other girl.

"The habit he had of proposing to me two or three times a week." —Indianapolis Journal.

DR. SHEPARD'S SANITARIUM

Offers exceptional advantages to the invalid as well as to those who would keep in health. That the Turkish bath is one of the most powerful remedies known to modern science, is admitted by many of the highest authorities in England, Europe and America.

It's success in Rheumatism, and kindred diseases, has been phenomenal. Malaria, or any blood poison, quickly yields to its potent influence. Neuralgia, or nerve pain, is immediately relieved under the influence of Hot Air in the Turkish bath.

As a Luxury, it surpasses all others, and as a Sanitary measure, a Turkish bath every week is invaluable.

By consulting the resident physician, instruction will be given to patients or bathers enabling them to secure the greatest amount of advantage possible from each Bath.

A skilled Masseuse and Electrician is in daily attendance in the ladies' department, and competent operators in Massage will be sent to residence on application.

The County Tax.

The Selectmen are in receipt of a bill for $2,570.17 the amount due the county on a two-tenths of a mill tax on the grand list of the town of Norwalk. Selectman Daskam told a GAZETTE reporter, this morning, that they, the selectmen, would object to the payment of the bill on the ground that other towns in the county had not made out their grand list to its full valuation as had Norwalk. The amount paid by Norwalk to the county in 1894 was $2,234.08.

A False Diagnosis.

La Grippe is confounded by many persons with a severe attack of catarrh, which in some respects resembles the former. These individuals suffer severely with pain about the forehead, eyes and ears, with soreness in throat and stoppage of the nasal passages, and in fact, are incapacitated for work of any kind for days at a time. These are catarrhal sufferers. Ely's Cream Balm has been used with the best results in such cases. The remedy will give instant relief.

Won't Open the Chapel.

A special meeting was held in the Broad River chapel last evening to take action in the matter of opening the chapel for meetings held by a society known as the Latter day Saints. Edgar Buttery acted as chairman. A resolution was presented by George C. Comstock, in effect that the chapel should not be opened for meetings of the Latter Day Saints, so called. After remarks on the resolution by George A. White, William E. Styles, Aaron Decker, Charles W. Hodges and George W. Mills, the resolution was carried.

The Discovery Saved His Life.

Mr. G. silhouette, Druggist, Beaversville, Ill., says: "To Dr. King's New Discovery I owe my life. Was taken with La Grippe and tried all the physicians for miles about, but of no avail and was given up and told I could not live. Having Dr. King's New Discovery in my store, I sent for a bottle, and began to use it, and from the first dose began to get better, and after using three bottles was up and about again. It is worth its weight in gold. We won't keep store or house without it." Get a free trial at H. R. Hale's Drug Store.

George M. Landers Dead.

The Hon. George M. Landers died at his home in New Britain at 10 o'clock last night of heart failure caused by kidney disease. He had been ill but a few days, but a fatal termination was feared from the first because of his age. Arrangement for the funeral will be made later.

George Marcellus Landers, ex-member of Congress and vice-president of the Landers, Frary & Clark Manufacturing Company, was born at Lenox, Mass., February 22, 1813. He was a representative from New Britain for three terms, and in 1853, and again in 1869 and 1873, he was sent to the state senate from the First Senatorial District. In 1875 he was elected to the forty-fourth congress, and was re-elected in 1877 on the democratic ticket. Of that delegation only John T. Waite of New London survives.

He married in 1839 Catherine Pearl of New Britain, who died in 1884. Their only child was C. S. Landers, who survives. His loss will be keenly felt in New Britain and in the state.
