A Real Necessity.
We presume there is hardly a lady to be found in our broad land, who, if she does not already possess a sewing machine, expects some day to become the owner of one.

But after the mind is fully made up to purchase a sewing machine, the question arises as to what kind of a machine to buy.

It should be so simply constructed that the most inexperienced can successfully operate it. The other points mainly to be considered, and which are the most desirable, are durability, rapidity, capacity for work, ease of operation, regularity of motion, uniformity of tension, and silence while in operation.

The "Light-Running New Home" fills the bill in every particular, and is, in fact, the best machine of the kind now in the market. The price is no higher than that of other machines, and every lady who is the happy possessor of one may rest assured she has made a wise investment.

Contract Convict Labor in Massachusetts.
The agitation against the system of employing the labor of convicts by contract, which was commenced seven years ago by the haters and other members, who were interested in the system, has been uniformly successful all along the line.

In Massachusetts, the right of convict labor began in the legislative session of 1881. Here, as elsewhere, the haters were far in advance of other grades, and, though few in number in the old Bay State, boldly proceeded to enlighten the public sentiment in regard to the pernicious effects of the system.

Considering the very conservative character of the people of Massachusetts, which shrinks from radical measures, the haters were able to bring about an abolition of the contract system, but in so doing, cut themselves out of reasonable figures the number of convicts to be employed at the several branches of industry.

This law was passed about May 30, 1884, and was given great relief, especially to the haters—the trades most severely injured—had not Governor Butler signed a new contract, with the Waring Hat company, for a number of convicts exceeding the limit of the present law fully one hundred, besides imposing no restriction against a still greater excess in the making of the contract while the new law was within a day or two of its final passage.

After carefully going over the whole ground and considering the question in all its bearings, the Boston committee of the Massachusetts Legislature, the cost of the Massachusetts Legislature, was chairman, unanimously agreed to report a bill abolishing the contract system, and employing the prisoners on state account, at the same time providing for the cancelling of the contract with the Waring Hat company, and carefully drawing up the lower house without encountering much opposition, about two weeks ago on the 17th of November, the bill was once more a serious obstacle.
